

UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT
FOR THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA :
 v. : CASE NO. 1:21-CR-204 BAH
 MATTHEW BLEDSOE, :
 Defendant. :

GOVERNMENT’S OPPOSITION TO DEFENDANT’S
MOTION TO TRANSFER VENUE

Defendant Matthew Bledsoe, who is charged in connection with events at the U.S. Capitol on January 6, 2021, has moved to transfer venue in this case to “another district.” Bledsoe fails to establish that he “cannot obtain a fair and impartial trial” in this district, Fed. R. Crim. P. 21(a), and this Court should deny his motion.<sup>1</sup>

BACKGROUND

On January 6, 2021, a Joint Session of the United States House of Representatives and the United States Senate convened to certify the vote of the Electoral College of the 2020 U.S. Presidential Election. While the certification process was proceeding, a large crowd gathered outside the United States Capitol, entered the restricted grounds, and forced entry into the Capitol building. As a result, the Joint Session and the entire official proceeding of the Congress was <sup>1</sup> Every judge on this Court to have ruled on a motion for change of venue in a January 6 prosecution has denied the motion. See United States v. Webster, No. 21-cr-208, ECF No. 78 (D.D.C. Apr. 18, 2022) (APM); United States v. Alford, 21-cr-263, ECF No. 46 (D.D.C. Apr. 18, 2022) (TSC); United States v. Brooks, No. 21-cr-503, ECF No. 31 (D.D.C. Jan. 24, 2022) (RCL); United States v. Bochene, No. 21-cr-418-RDM, 2022 WL 123893 (D.D.C. Jan. 12, 2022) (RDM); *United States v. halted until law enforcement was able to clear the Capitol of hundreds of unlawful occupants and ensure the safety of elected officials.

Bledsoe unlawfully entered the United States Capitol on January 6. On the morning of January 6, he attended the Trump rally, then walked to the United States Capitol, taking photographs and video along the way. Bledsoe scaled a wall on the west side of the Capitol building and joined a crowd that had gathered outside the Senate wing door. Bledsoe documented his breach in a selfie-style video on his cellphone. With an alarm blaring in the background, Bledsoe announced, “We in this bitch!” His co-defendants said, “We’re going in!” and screamed, “Ah!” Bledsoe then stated, “In the Capitol! This is our house! We pay for this shit! Where’s those pieces of shit at?” as he entered the Senate Wing Door with an alarm blaring in the background and broken glass nearby. Bledsoe walked through the Capitol through the Crypt, the Rotunda, Statuary Hall, and through the hallways outside the House of Representatives. He remained inside the Capitol for approximately 20 minutes, at times joining others yelling, “Stop the Steal!” and shouting, “Our House!”

Based on his actions on January 6, 2021, the grand jury charged Bledsoe with one count each of obstructing an official proceeding and aiding and abetting the same (18 U.S.C. § 1512(c)(2)); entering and remaining in a restricting building or grounds (18 U.S.C. § 1752(a)(1)); engaging in disorderly conduct in a restricted building or ground (18 U.S.C. § 1751(a)(2)); engaging in disorderly conduct in a U.S. Capitol building (40 U.S.C. § 5104(e)(2)(D)); and parading, demonstrating, or picketing in a U.S. Capitol building (40 U.S.C. § 5104(e)(2)(G)). ECF 23.

Bledsoe now moves for a change of venue. ECF 190. He contends that prejudice should be presumed in this district for four primary reasons: (1) the impact of January 6 on Washington, D.C., (2) the political makeup of the District of Columbia jury pool, (3) pretrial publicity surrounding the events of January 6, and (4) the results of a survey of potential jurors. Each of Bledsoe's arguments is without merit, and the motion should be denied.

ARGUMENT

The Constitution provides that “[t]he trial of all Crimes . . . shall be held in the State where the said Crimes shall have been committed.” U.S. Const. Art. III, § 2, cl. 3. The Sixth Amendment similarly guarantees the right to be tried “by an impartial jury of the State and district wherein the crime shall have been committed.” U.S. Const. amend. VI. These provisions provide “a safeguard against the unfairness and hardship involved when an accused is prosecuted in a remote place.” United States v. Cores, 356 U.S. 405, 407 (1958). Transfer to another venue is constitutionally required only where “extraordinary local prejudice will prevent a fair trial.” Skilling v. United States, 561 U.S. 358, 378 (2010); see Fed. R. Crim. P. 21(a) (requiring transfer to another district if “so great a prejudice against the defendant exists in the transferring district that the defendant cannot obtain a fair and impartial trial there”).

The primary safeguard of the right to an impartial jury is “an adequate voir dire to identify unqualified jurors.” Morgan v. Illinois, 504 U.S. 719, 729 (1992) (italics omitted). Thus, the best course when faced with a pretrial publicity claim is ordinarily “to proceed to voir dire to ascertain whether the prospective jurors have, in fact, been influenced by pretrial publicity.” United States v. Campa, 459 F.3d 1121, 1146 (11th Cir. 2006) (en banc). “[I]f an impartial jury actually cannot be selected, that fact should become evident at the voir dire.” United States v. Haldeman, 559 F.2d 31, 63 (D.C. Cir. 1976) (en banc) (per curiam). And, after voir dire, “it may be found that, despite earlier prognostications, removal of the trial is unnecessary.” Jones v. Gasch, 404 F.2d 1231, 1238 (D.C. Cir. 1967).

I. The Impact of January 6 on Washington D.C. Does Not Support a Presumption of Prejudice.

Bledsoe contends that a D.C. jury could not be impartial because D.C. residents have been particularly affected by events surrounding January 6, including the deployment of the National Guard, the mayor's declaration of a state of emergency, road closures, and a curfew. ECF 190, at p. 5-6. But January 6 is now more than a year in the past. Many D.C. residents do not live or work near the Capitol where the roads were closed and the National Guard was deployed. There is no reason to believe that the District's entire population of nearly 700,000 people was so affected by these events that the Court cannot seat an impartial jury here.

Indeed, courts routinely conclude that defendants can receive a fair trial in the location where they committed their crimes, despite the fact that some members of the community were victimized. See In re Tsarnaev, 780 F.3d 14, 15 (1st Cir. 2015) (Boston Marathon bombing); Skilling, 561 U.S. at 399 (Enron collapse); United States v. Yousef, 327 F.3d 56, 155 (2d Cir. 2003) (1993 World Trade Center bombing); United States v. Moussaoui, 43 F. App'x 612, 613 (4th Cir. 2002) (per curiam) (unpublished) (September 11, 2001 attacks, including on the Pentagon). In Skilling, the Supreme Court rejected the contention that Enron's "sheer number of victims" in the Houston area "trigger[ed] a presumption of prejudice." Skilling, 561 U.S. at 384 (quotation omitted). "Although the widespread community impact necessitated careful identification and inspection of prospective jurors' connections to Enron," the voir dire was "well suited to that task." Id. In this case too, voir dire can adequately identify those D.C. residents who were so affected by January 6 that they cannot impartially serve as jurors. There is no reason to presume prejudice.

II. The District of Columbia's Political Makeup Does Not Support a Presumption of Prejudice.

Bledsoe contends that he cannot obtain a fair trial in the District of Columbia because “more than 92% of D.C. voters cast their ballots for Joseph Biden in the 2020 presidential election.” ECF 190, at p. 6. The en banc D.C. Circuit rejected a nearly identical claim in Haldeman, where the dissent concluded that a venue change was required because “Washington, D.C. is unique in its overwhelming concentration of supporters of the Democratic Party” and the Democratic candidate received 81.8% and 78.1% of the vote when Nixon ran for President in 1968 and 1972, respectively. Haldeman, 559 F.2d at 160 (MacKinnon, J., concurring in part and dissenting in part). The majority rejected the relevance of this fact, observing that authority cited by the dissent gave no “intimation that a community’s voting patterns are at all pertinent to venue.” Id. at 64 n.43; see also United States v. Chapin, 515 F.2d 1274, 1286 (D.C. Cir. 1975) (rejecting the argument that “because of [the defendant’s] connection with the Nixon administration and his participation in a ‘dirty tricks’ campaign aimed at Democratic candidates and with racial overtones, a truly fair and impartial jury could not have been drawn from the District’s heavily black, and overwhelmingly Democratic, population”).

If “the District of Columbia’s voting record in the past two presidential elections” is not “at all pertinent to venue” in a case involving high-ranking members of a presidential administration, Haldeman, 559 F.2d at 64 n.43, it cannot justify a change of venue here. To be sure, some potential jurors might be unable to be impartial in January 6 cases based on disagreement with the defendants’ political aims. But whether individual prospective jurors have such disqualifying biases can be assessed during voir dire. This Court should not presume that every member of a particular political party is biased simply because this case has a political connection. Indeed, the Supreme Court has stated in the context of an election-fraud trial, that “[t]he law assumes that every citizen is equally interested in the enforcement of the statute enacted to guard the integrity of national elections, and that his political opinions or affiliations will not stand in the way of an honest discharge of his duty as a juror in cases arising under that statute.” Connors v. United States, 158 U.S. 408, 414 (1895). The same is true here. The District’s voting record does not establish that this Court will be unable to select “an unbiased jury capable of basing its verdict solely on the evidence introduced at trial.” Haldeman, 559 F.2d at 70.

To the contrary, as the nation’s capital and seat of the federal government, the District has been home to its fair share of trials in politically charged cases. High-profile individuals strongly associated with a particular party, such as Marion Barry, John Poindexter, Oliver North, Scooter Libby, and Roger Stone, have all been tried in the District. See United States v. Barry, 938 F.2d 1327 (D.C. Cir. 1991); United States v. Poindexter, 951 F.2d 369 (D.C. Cir. 1991); United States v. North, 910 F.2d 843 (D.C. Cir. 1990) (per curiam); United States v. Libby, 498 F. Supp. 2d 1 (D.D.C. 2007); United States v. Stone, No. 19-CR-0018 (ABJ), 2020 WL 1892360 (D.D.C. Apr. 16, 2020). Indeed, the Court in Stone rejected the argument that jurors “could not possibly view [Roger Stone] independently from the President” because of his role in the presidential campaign or that “if you do not like Donald Trump, you must not like Roger Stone.” 2020 WL 1892360, at *30-31. Similarly here, the fact that most District residents voted against Donald Trump does not mean those residents could not impartially consider the evidence against those charged in connection with the events on January 6.

III. The Pretrial Publicity Related to January 6 Does Not Support a Presumption of Prejudice in This District.

Bledsoe also contends that prejudice should be presumed based on pretrial publicity. ECF 190, at p. 4. “The mere existence of intense pretrial publicity is not enough to make a trial unfair, nor is the fact that potential jurors have been exposed to this publicity.” United States v. Childress, 58 F.3d 693, 706 (D.C. Cir. 1995); see Murphy v. Florida, 421 U.S. 794, 799 (1975) (juror exposure to “news accounts of the crime with which [a defendant] is charged” does not “alone presumptively deprive[] the defendant of due process”). Indeed, “every case of public interest is almost, as a matter of necessity, brought to the attention of all the intelligent people in the vicinity, and scarcely any one can be found among those best fitted for jurors who has not read or heard of it, and who has not some impression or some opinion in respect to its merits.” Reynolds v. United States, 98 U.S. 145, 155-56 (1878). Thus, the “mere existence of any preconceived notion as to the guilt or innocence of an accused, without more,” is insufficient to establish prejudice. Irvin, 366 U.S. at 723. “It is sufficient if the juror can lay aside his impression or opinion and render a verdict based on the evidence presented in court.” Id.

The Supreme Court has recognized only a narrow category of cases in which prejudice is presumed to exist without regard to prospective jurors’ answers during voir dire. See Rideau v. Louisiana, 373 U.S. 723 (1963). In Rideau, the defendant’s confession—obtained while he was in jail and without an attorney present—was broadcast three times shortly before trial on a local television station to audiences ranging from 24,000 to 53,000 individuals in a parish of approximately 150,000 people. Id. at 724 (majority opinion), 728-29 (Clark, J., dissenting). The Court concluded that, “to the tens of thousands of people who saw and heard it,” the televised confession “in a very real sense was Rideau’s trial—at which he pleaded guilty to murder.” Rideau, 373 U.S. at 726. Thus, the Court “d[id] not hesitate to hold, without pausing to examine a particularized transcript of the voir dire,” that these “kangaroo court proceedings” violated due process. Id. at 726-27.

Since Rideau, the Supreme Court has emphasized that a “presumption of prejudice . . . attends only the extreme case,” Skilling, 561 U.S. at 381, and the Court has repeatedly “held in other cases that trials have been fair in spite of widespread publicity,” Nebraska Press Ass’n v. Stuart, 427 U.S. 539, 554 (1976). In the half century since Rideau, the Supreme Court has never presumed prejudice based on pretrial publicity. But see Estes v. Texas, 381 U.S. 532 (1965) (presuming prejudice based on media interference with courtroom proceedings); Sheppard v. Maxwell, 384 U.S. 333 (1966) (same). In fact, courts have declined to transfer venue in some of the most high-profile prosecutions in recent American history. See In re Tsarnaev, 780 F.3d 14, 15 (1st Cir. 2015) (per curiam) (capital prosecution of Boston Marathon bomber); Skilling, 561 U.S. at 399 (fraud trial of CEO of Enron Corporation); United States v. Yousef, 327 F.3d 56, 155 (2d Cir. 2003) (trial of participant in 1993 World Trade Center bombing); United States v. Moussaoui, 43 F. App'x 612, 613 (4th Cir. 2002) (per curiam) (unpublished) (terrorism prosecution for conspirator in September 11, 2001 attacks); Haldeman, 559 F.2d at 70 (Watergate prosecution of former Attorney General John Mitchell and other Nixon aides).

In Skilling, the Supreme Court considered several factors in determining that prejudice should not be presumed where former Enron executive Jeffrey Skilling was tried in Houston, where Enron was based. Skilling, 561 U.S. at 382-83. First, the Court considered the “size and characteristics of the community.” Id. at 382. Unlike Rideau, where the murder “was committed in a parish of only 150,000 residents,” Houston was home to more than 4.5 million people eligible for jury service. Id. at 382. Second, “although news stories about Skilling were not kind, they contained no confession or other blatantly prejudicial information of the type readers or viewers could not reasonably be expected to shut from sight.” Id. Third, “over four years elapsed between Enron’s bankruptcy and Skilling’s trial,” and “the decibel level of media attention diminished somewhat in the years following Enron’s collapse.” Id. at 383. “Finally, and of prime significance, Skilling’s jury acquitted him of nine insider-trading counts,” which undermined any “supposition of juror bias.” Id.

Although these Skilling factors are not exhaustive, courts have found them useful when considering claims of presumptive prejudice based on pretrial publicity. See, e.g., In re Tsarnaev, 780 F.3d at 21-22; United States v. Petters, 663 F.3d 375, 385 (8th Cir. 2011). And contrary to Bledsoe's contention, those factors do not support a presumption of prejudice in this case.

A. Size and characteristics of the community

The defendant suggests (ECF 190, at p. 5-7) that an impartial jury cannot be found in Washington, D.C., despite the District's population of nearly 700,000. Although this District may be smaller than most other federal judicial districts, it has a larger population than two states (Wyoming and Vermont), and more than four times as many people as the parish in Rideau. The relevant question is not whether the District of Columbia is as populous as the Southern District of Texas in Skilling, but whether it is large enough that an impartial jury can be found. In Mu'Min v. Virginia, 500 U.S. 415, 429 (1991), the Court cited a county population of 182,537 as supporting the view that an impartial jury could be selected. And Skilling approvingly cited a state case in which there was "a reduced likelihood of prejudice" because the "venire was drawn from a pool of over 600,000 individuals." Skilling, 561 U.S. at 382 (quoting Gentile v. State Bar of Nev., 501 U.S. 1030, 1044 (1991)). There is simply no reason to believe that, out of an eligible jury pool of nearly half a million, "12 impartial individuals could not be empaneled." Id.

B. Nature of the pretrial publicity

Nor does this case involve a "confession or other blatantly prejudicial information of the type readers or viewers could not reasonably be expected to shut from sight." Skilling, 561 U.S. at 382. Even news stories that are "not kind," Skilling, 561 U.S. at 382, or are "hostile in tone and accusatory in content," Haldeman, 559 F.2d at 61, do not alone raise a presumption of prejudice. As in Skilling and Haldeman, the news coverage of Bledsoe is "neither as inherently prejudicial nor as unforgettable as the spectacle of Rideau's dramatically staged and broadcast confession."

Id. Indeed, although any media characterizations of Bledsoe would be inadmissible, the photos and videos of Bledsoe that have been disseminated would be both admissible and highly relevant at trial. Compare Sheppard, 384 U.S. at 360 (noting that information reported by the media was “clearly inadmissible” and that “[t]he exclusion of such evidence in court is rendered meaningless when news media make it available to the public”), with Murray v. Schriro, 882 F.3d 778, 805 (9th Cir. 2018) (“There was no inflammatory barrage of information that would be inadmissible at trial. Rather, the news reports focused on relaying mainly evidence presented at trial.”); Henderson v. Dugger, 925 F.2d 1309, 1314 (11th Cir. 1991) (“[B]ecause we have found [the defendant’s] confessions were admissible, the damage if any from the [pretrial] publicity is negligible.”).

Bledsoe argues that prejudice should be presumed based on statements by the Vice President. ECF 190, at p. 7-8. According to Bledsoe, “the events of January 6 have been ascribed a once-in-a-generation infamy” similar to events experienced by other generations. He quotes a piece from the Washington Post in which the Vice President compared January 6 to the Japanese attack on Pearl Harbor and the terrorist attack on the World Trade Center and the Pentagon. ECF 190, at 7. But harsh condemnation of a defendant’s actions is not uncommon in high-profile criminal cases, and it does not suffice to establish prejudice. In Skilling, the news stories about the defendant’s involvement in Enron’s collapse “were not kind,” but they “contained no confession or other blatantly prejudicial information of the type readers or viewers could not reasonably be expected to shut from sight.” Skilling, 561 U.S. at 382. And in Haldeman, although some of the coverage of the Watergate scandal was “hostile in tone and accusatory in content,” the bulk of the coverage “consist[ed] of straightforward, unemotional factual accounts of events and of the progress of official and unofficial investigations.” Haldeman, 559 F.2d at 61. The D.C. Circuit concluded that the coverage “was neither as inherently prejudicial nor as unforgettable as the spectacle of Rideau’s dramatically staged and broadcast confession.” Id. The same is true here, where news coverage has not reported on any confession or other blatantly prejudicial information about Bledsoe. And, again, statements by the Vice President are ordinarily reported across the entire country, and exposure to these statements is hardly unique to Washington, D.C.

C. Passage of time before trial

In Skilling, the Court considered the fact that “over four years elapsed between Enron’s bankruptcy and Skilling’s trial.” Skilling, 561 U.S. at 383. In this case, 16 months have already elapsed since the events of January 6, and more time will elapse before trial. This is far more than in Rideau, where the defendant’s trial came two months after his televised confession. Rideau, 373 U.S. at 724. Although January 6 continues to be in the news, the “decibel level of media attention [has] diminished somewhat,” Skilling, 561 U.S. at 383. Moreover, only a relatively small percentage of the recent stories have mentioned Bledsoe, and much of the reporting has been national in scope, rather than limited to Washington, D.C.

D. The jury verdict

Because Bledsoe has not yet gone to trial, the final Skilling factor—whether the “jury’s verdict . . . undermine[s] in any way the supposition of juror bias,” Skilling, 561 U.S. at 383—does not directly apply. But the fact that Skilling considered this factor to be “of prime significance,” id., underscores how unusual it is to presume prejudice before trial. Ordinarily, a case should proceed to trial in the district where the crime was committed, and courts can examine after trial whether the record supports a finding of actual or presumed prejudice. In short, none of the Skilling factors support the defendant’s contention that the Court should presume prejudice and order a transfer of venue without even conducting voir dire.

IV. The Poll Submitted by the Defendant Does Not Support a Presumption of Prejudice.

Bledsoe relies on a poll conducted by Select Litigation, a private litigation consulting firm, at the request of the Federal Public Defender for the District of Columbia. ECF 190, at 8. Select Litigation conducted a telephone poll of potential jurors in the District of Columbia and in the Atlanta Division of the Northern District of Georgia and contracted with a media research firm to analyze news media coverage of January 6 in both of those jurisdictions. That poll does not support Bledsoe's request for a venue transfer.

A. Courts have repeatedly declined to find a presumption of prejudice based on pretrial polling without conducting voir dire.

Bledsoe argues that this Court should find a presumption of prejudice based on a poll of prospective jurors. But "courts have commonly rejected such polls as unpersuasive in favor of effective voir dire as a preferable way to ferret out any bias." United States v. Causey, 2005 WL 8160703, at *7 (S.D. Tex. 2005). As one circuit has observed, the Supreme Court's emphasis on the important role of voir dire in addressing pretrial publicity "undercuts" the "argument that poll percentages . . . decide the question of a presumption of prejudice." In re Tsarnaev, 780 F.3d 14, 23 (1st Cir. 2015) (per curiam); see Mu'Min v. Virginia, 500 U.S. 415, 427 (1991) (observing that, "[p]articularly with respect to pretrial publicity, . . . primary reliance on the judgment of the trial court makes good sense").

Indeed, the D.C. Circuit has rejected a claim of presumed prejudice based on the results of a pre-voir dire survey. Haldeman, 559 F.2d at 64. In Haldeman, seven former Nixon administration officials (including the former Attorney General of the United States) were prosecuted for their role in the Watergate scandal. Id. at 51. According to a poll commissioned by the defense in that case, 93% of the Washington, D.C. population knew of the charges against the defendants and 61% had formed the opinion that they were guilty. Id. at 144, 178 n.2

(MacKinnon, J., concurring in part and dissenting in part). Recognizing that the case had produced a “massive” amount of pretrial publicity, id. at 61, the D.C. Circuit nevertheless held that the district court “was correct” to deny the defendants’ “pre-voir dire requests for . . . a change of venue,” id. at 63-64. The court observed that the district court “did not err in relying less heavily on a poll taken in private by private pollsters and paid for by one side than on a recorded, comprehensive voir dire examination conducted by the judge in the presence of all parties and their counsel.” Id. at 64 n.43; see Jones, 404 F.2d at 1238 (observing that it is “upon the voir dire examination,” and “usually only then, that a fully adequate appraisal of the claim [of local community prejudice] can be made” (quotation omitted)).

Other circuits have similarly rejected attempts to elevate polling results over voir dire. In United States v. Campa, a pre-trial survey found that 69% of respondents were prejudiced against anyone charged with spying on behalf of Cuba, as the defendants were. Campa, 459 F.3d at 1157 (Birch, J., dissenting). The en banc Eleventh Circuit affirmed the denial of a motion for change of venue, explaining that “[w]hen a defendant alleges that prejudicial pretrial publicity would prevent him from receiving a fair trial, it is within the district court’s broad discretion to proceed to voir dire to ascertain whether the prospective jurors have, in fact, been influenced by pretrial publicity.” Id. at 1146 (majority opinion).

Similarly, in United States v. Rodriguez, 581 F.3d 775 (8th Cir. 2009), a poll indicated that 99 percent of respondents had heard about the brutal rape and murder with which the defendant was charged, nearly 88 percent of those respondents believed he was guilty, and about 42 percent of respondents had a strongly held opinion of his guilt. Id. at 786; Brief for the Appellant, United States v. Rodriguez, No. 07-1316 (8th Cir.), 2008 WL 194877, at *19. Nonetheless, the Eighth Circuit found no presumption of prejudice, observing that a district court was not required “to consider public opinion polls when ruling on change-of-venue motions.” Rodriguez, 581 F.3d at 786. And the court held that, in any event, the poll did not “demonstrate widespread community prejudice” because the “media coverage had not been inflammatory,” two years had passed since the murder, and “the district court concluded that special voir dire protocols would screen out prejudiced jurors.” Id.

There are good reasons to rely on voir dire, rather than public-opinion polls, when assessing whether prejudice should be presumed. First, polling lacks many of the safeguards of court-supervised voir dire, including the involvement of both parties in formulating the questions. Surveys that are not carefully worded and properly conducted can produce misleading results, such as by asking leading questions or providing the respondents with facts that will influence their responses. See Campa, 459 F.3d at 1146 (noting problems with “non-neutral” and “ambiguous” questions). Second, polling lacks the formality that attends in-court proceedings under oath, and it does not afford the court the “face-to-face opportunity to gauge demeanor and credibility.” Skilling, 561 U.S. at 395. Third, polls ordinarily inform the court only the extent to which prospective jurors have heard about a case and formed an opinion about it. But that is not the ultimate question when picking a jury. A prospective juror is not disqualified simply because he has “formed some impression or opinion as to the merits of the case.” Irvin, 366 U.S. at 722. Instead, “[i]t is sufficient if the juror can lay aside his impression or opinion and render a verdict based on the evidence presented in court.” Id. at 723. But pre-trial surveys are poorly suited to answering that ultimate question, which is best asked in the context of face-to-face voir dire under oath. See Rosales-Lopez v. United States, 451 U.S. 182, 188 (1981) (observing that the trial judge’s function in voir dire “is not unlike that of the jurors later in the trial” because “[b]oth must reach conclusions as to impartiality and credibility by relying on their own evaluations of demeanor evidence and of responses to questions”).

In sum, federal courts have shown an overwhelming preference for assessing prejudice through court-supervised voir dire rather than through public opinion polls. And Bledsoe has not offered any reason to depart from that usual practice here. Thus, this Court need not give substantial weight to the polling when considering whether to presume prejudice. But, as explained below, the poll submitted by Bledsoe does not support a presumption of prejudice in any event.

B. The Select Litigation poll does not demonstrate pervasive prejudice in the District of Columbia.

Contrary to the defendant’s contention, the Select Litigation poll does not support a presumption of prejudice in this District. The poll indicates that levels of media exposure to the events of January 6 are not significantly different in Atlanta than in Washington, D.C. The number of respondents who had seen “[a] lot” of coverage in each jurisdiction differed only by three percentage points (33% in D.C. versus 30% in Atlanta), which is within the margin of error. ECF 190 at 1-2, 14. The number of respondents who had seen “[s]ome” coverage was exactly the same (25% in both jurisdictions), and the number who had seen “[q]uite a bit” of coverage was not significantly different (28% in D.C. versus 20% in Atlanta). Id. at 14. The total percentage of respondents who were exposed to “[a] lot,” “[q]uite a bit,” or “[s]ome” news coverage was 86% in Washington, D.C. and 75% in Atlanta. Id. at 14. This relatively small difference does not suggest that news coverage has made it impossible to pick an impartial jury in Washington, D.C.

Bledsoe points out (ECF 190, at 9) that 71% of respondents in D.C. said they had formed the opinion January 6 arrestees were “guilty” of the charges brought against them. See ECF 190-1 at 7. The survey failed, however, to identify (much less define) any of the charges brought against the defendant. It also failed to provide respondents with the option of saying they were “unsure” about guilt, even though such an option is required by professional standards that apply in this area. See American Society of Trial Consultants, Professional Standards for Venue Surveys at 9, available at <https://www.astcweb.org/Resources/Pictures/Venue%2010-08.pdf> (“Respondents must be made aware that they can say they do not know or have no opinion.”). The survey instead gave respondents a binary choice between “guilty or not guilty.” ECF 190-1 at 7. Yet even without being provided the appropriate options, 26% of D.C. respondents voluntarily gave an answer of “Depends” or “Don’t know/Refused.” Id. This shows that, even in response to a poorly worded question, more than a quarter of the District’s residents realized the need to keep an open mind about guilt.

Understood in context, the Select Litigation poll does not indicate any higher degree of juror bias than in Haldeman, where the en banc D.C. Circuit found no presumption of prejudice. In Haldeman, 61% of respondents expressed a view that the defendants were guilty, as opposed to the 71% here. See Haldeman, 559 F.2d at 144, 178 n.2 (MacKinnon, J., concurring in part and dissenting in part). But the survey in Haldeman first asked respondents whether they had formed an opinion about whether the indicted Nixon aides were guilty or innocent, giving options for both “No” (i.e. had not formed an opinion) and “Don’t Know/No Opinion.” Id. at 178 n.2. The survey then asked whether respondents thought the defendants were “guilty or innocent in the Watergate affair,” giving options for “Not Guilty Until Proven” and “No Opinion/Don’t Know.” Id. Only after (a) being prompted to consider whether they could actually form an opinion, and (b) being reminded of the presumption of innocence, did 61% of respondents say “guilty.” Id. Here, by contrast, respondents were not provided a “don’t know” option, were not reminded of the presumption of innocence, and were asked only whether they thought the “several hundred people” arrested in connection with January 6 were “guilty.” ECF 190-1 at 14 (Questions 3, 4).

When asked about guilt in the context of a criminal trial, however, respondents in the Select Litigation survey were far less likely to give an answer of “guilty.” Question 5 asked them to “[a]ssume [they] were on a jury for a defendant charged with crimes for his or her activities on January 6” and then asked whether they were “more likely to vote that the person is guilty or not guilty.” ECF 190-1 at 14. In response to this question, only 52% of D.C. respondents said “Guilty,” and fully 46% volunteered a response of “Depends” or “Don’t know/Refused.” Id. Thus, when asked to consider guilt or innocence in the context of a “defendant charged with crimes,” as opposed to the “several hundred people . . . arrested,” nearly half of D.C. residents were committed to keeping an open mind—even without being instructed on the presumption of innocence or being provided an option for “Do not know.” This indicates, if anything, a lower degree of prejudice than was present in Haldeman.

Prejudice should not be presumed based on the survey’s finding that a substantial numbers of respondents “would” describe “the people who forced their way into the U.S. Capitol” as “[t]rying to overturn the election and keep Donald Trump in power” (85%), engaging in “[i]nsurrection” (76%), or “[t]rying to overthrow the U.S. government” (72%). ECF 190-1 at 15. For one thing, this question asked specifically about those who “forced their way into the U.S. Capitol,” which suggests a higher degree of culpability than simply entering the Capitol. For another, the poll did not provide an “undecided” option but asked only whether respondents “would” or “would not” use those descriptions. Id. Nor did the question define the offenses of “insurrection” or advocating the overthrow of government, see 18 U.S.C. §§ 2383, 2385, offenses with which no defendant has been charged in connection with January 6. And, most importantly, the poll did not answer the key question: whether a sufficient number of prospective jurors can “lay aside [their] impression[s] or opinion[s] and render a verdict based on the evidence presented in court.” Irvin v. Dowd, 366 U.S. 717, 723 (1961); see Patton v. Yount, 467 U.S. 1025, 1029 (1984) (no presumption of prejudice where nearly 99% of prospective jurors had heard of the case and 77% indicated on voir dire that “they would carry an opinion into the jury box”). In short, the Select Litigation poll does not come close to demonstrating that “12 impartial individuals could not be empaneled” in Washington, D.C. Skilling, 561 U.S. at 382.

In any U.S. jurisdiction, most prospective jurors will have heard about the events of January 6, and many will have various disqualifying biases. But the appropriate way to identify and address those biases is through a careful voir dire, rather than a change of venue based solely on pretrial polling and media analyses. As in Haldeman, there is “no reason for concluding that the population of Washington, D. C. [i]s so aroused against [the defendant] and so unlikely to be able objectively to judge [his] guilt or innocence on the basis of the evidence presented at trial” that a change of venue is required. Haldeman, 559 F.2d at 62.

V. The Voir Dire Process in the First January 6 Jury Trials Has Demonstrated the Availability of a Significant Number of Fair, Impartial Jurors in the D.C. Venire.

At this point, five other January 6 cases have proceeded to jury trials, and the Court in each of those cases has been able to select a jury without undue expenditure of time or effort. See Murphy, 421 U.S. at 802-03 (“The length to which the trial court must go to select jurors who appear to be impartial is another factor relevant in evaluating those jurors’ assurances of impartiality.”); Haldeman, 559 F.2d at 63 (observing that “if an impartial jury actually cannot be selected, that fact should become evident at the voir dire”). Instead, the judges presiding over each of those trials was able to select a jury in one or two days. See United States v. Reffitt, 21-cr-32, Minute Entries (D.D.C. Feb. 28 and Mar. 1, 2022); United States v. Robertson, 21-cr-34-CRC, Minute Entry (D.D.C. Apr. 5, 2022); United States v. Thompson, 21-cr-161, Minute Entry (D.D.C. Apr. 11, 2022); United States v. Webster, No. 21-cr-208, Minute Entry (D.D.C. Apr. 25, 2022);

United States v. Hale-Cusanelli, 21-cr-37, Minute Entry (D.D.C. May 23, 2022). And although the government does not yet have transcripts from the Thompson or Hale-Cusanelli trials, the voir dire in the other three cases undermines the defendant's claim that prejudice should be presumed.<sup>2</sup>

In Reffitt, the Court individually examined 56 prospective jurors and qualified 38 of them (about 68% of those examined). See Reffitt Trial Tr. 521. The Court asked all the prospective jurors whether they had "an opinion about Mr. Reffitt's guilt or innocence in this case" and whether they had any "strong feelings or opinions" about the events of January 6 or any political beliefs that it would make it difficult to be a "fair and impartial" juror. Reffitt Trial Tr. 23, 30. The Court then followed up during individual voir dire and qualified ten prospective jurors who had answered one or more of those bias questions affirmatively but who clarified during individual questioning that they could decide the case fairly and impartially.<sup>3</sup> Of the 18 jurors that were struck for cause, only nine (or 16% of the 56 people examined) indicated that they had such strong feelings about the events of January 6 that they could not serve as fair or impartial jurors.<sup>4</sup>

Similarly, in Robertson, the Court individually examined 49 prospective jurors and qualified 34 of them (or about 69% of those examined). See Robertson Trial Tr. 302. The Court <sup>4</sup> For those struck based on a professed inability to be impartial, see Reffitt Trial Tr. 49-54 (Juror 328), 61-68 (Juror 1541), 112-29 (Juror 1046), 172-73 (Juror 443), 174-78 (Juror 45), 202-09 (Juror 1747), 223-35 (Juror 432), 263-74 (Juror 514), 358-69 (Juror 1484). For those struck for other reasons, see Reffitt Trial Tr. 168-172 (Juror 313, worked at Library of Congress), 209-24, 281 (Juror 728, moved out of D.C.), 284 (Juror 1650, over 70 and declined to serve), 340-51 (Juror 548, unavailability), 382 (Juror 715, anxiety and views on guns), 398 (Juror 548, medical appointments), 441-43 (Juror 1240, health hardship), 453-65 (Juror 464, worked at Library of Congress), 465-81 (Juror 1054, prior knowledge of facts).

asked all prospective jurors whether they had “such strong feelings” about the events of January 6 that it would be “difficult” to follow the court’s instructions “and render a fair and impartial verdict.” Id. at 14. It asked whether anything about the allegations in that case would prevent prospective jurors from “being neutral and fair” and whether their political views would affect their ability to be “fair and impartial.” Id. at 13, 15. As in Reffitt, the Court followed up on affirmative answers to those questions during individual voir dire, and of the 12 prospective jurors who raised potential concerns about their partiality during voir dire, the Court qualified two who indicated that they could, in fact, be impartial, and struck one for a different reason.<sup>5</sup> Of the 15 prospective jurors struck for cause, only nine (or 18% of the 49 people examined) indicated that they had such strong feelings about the January 6 events that they could not be fair or impartial.<sup>6</sup>

In Webster, the Court individually examined 53 jurors and qualified 35 of them (or 66%). Webster 4-26-22 AM Tr. 6, though it later excused one of those 35 based on hardship, Webster 4-25-22 PM Tr. 217-18. The Court asked all prospective jurors whether they had “strong feelings” about the events of January 6 or about the former President that would “make it difficult for [the prospective juror] to serve as a fair and impartial juror in this case.” Webster 4-25-22 AM Tr. 19. During individual voir dire, the Court followed up on affirmative answers to clarify whether prospective jurors could set aside their feelings and decide the case fairly. See, e.g., id. at 32-33, 41-42, 54-56, 63, 65-66. The presiding judge observed that the Court was able to “qualify 35 jurors after questioning 53 of them” and recalled that only “about 50 percent” of those stricken for cause were stricken based on “either connections to the events or because they expressed an inability to be fair and impartial.” Webster, 4-26-22 AM Tr. 7. The transcripts confirm that only 10 out of 53 prospective jurors (or about 19%) were stricken based on a professed or imputed inability to be impartial, as opposed to some other reason.<sup>7</sup> The Webster Court observed that this number “was actually relatively low” and therefore “doesn’t bear out the concerns that were at root in the venue transfer motion” in that case. Id.

<sup>6</sup> For those struck based on a professed inability to be impartial, see Robertson Trial Tr. 26-34 (Juror 1431), 97-100 (Juror 1567), 121-30 (Juror 936), 136-42 (Juror 799), 160-71 (Juror 696), 189-93 (Juror 429), 256-65 (Juror 1010), 265-68 (Juror 585), 287-92 (Juror 1160). For those struck for other reasons, see Robertson Trial Tr. 23-26 (Juror 1566, hardship related to care for elderly sisters), 83-84 (Juror 1027, moved out of D.C.), 156-60 (Juror 1122, language concerns), 193-96 (Juror 505, work hardship), 245-50 (Juror 474, work trip); 279-82 (Juror 846, preplanned trip).

In these first few trials, the percentage of prospective jurors stricken for cause based on partiality is far lower than in Irvin, where the Supreme Court said that “statement[s] of impartiality” by some prospective jurors could be given “little weight” based on the number of other prospective jurors who “admitted prejudice.” Irvin, 366 U.S. at 728. In Irvin, 268 of 430 prospective jurors (or 62%) were stricken for cause based on “fixed opinions as to the guilt of petitioner.” Id. at 727. The percentage of partiality-based strikes in these January 6-related trials—between 16% and 19% of those examined—is far lower than the 62% in Irvin. The percentage in these cases is lower even than in Murphy, where 20 of 78 prospective jurors (25%) were “excused because they indicated an opinion as to petitioner’s guilt.” Murphy, 421 U.S. at 803. Murphy said that this percentage “by no means suggests a community with sentiment so poisoned against petitioner as to impeach the indifference of jurors who displayed no animus of their own.” Id. As in Murphy, the number of prospective jurors indicating bias does not call into question the qualifications of others whose statements of impartiality the Court has credited.

<sup>7</sup> Nine of the 19 stricken jurors were excused based on hardship or a religious belief. See Webster 4-25-22 AM Tr. 46 (Juror 1464), 49-50 (Juror 1132), 61 (Juror 1153), 68 (Juror 951), 78 (Juror 419); Webster 4-25-22 PM Tr. 102-04, 207, 217 (Juror 571), 188 (Juror 1114), 191 (Juror 176), 203-04 (Juror 1262). Of the ten other stricken jurors, three professed an ability to be impartial but were nevertheless stricken based on a connection to the events or to the U.S. Attorney’s Office. See Webster 4-25-22 AM Tr. at 58-60 (Juror 689 was a deputy chief of staff for a member of congress); Webster 4-25-22 PM Tr. at 139-41 (Juror 625’s former mother-in-law was a member of congress); 196-98 (Juror 780 was a former Assistant U.S. Attorney in D.C.).

Far from showing that “an impartial jury actually cannot be selected,” Haldeman, 559 F.2d at 63, the first few January 6-related trials have confirmed that voir dire can adequately screen out prospective jurors who cannot be fair and impartial, while leaving more than sufficient qualified jurors to hear the case. The Court should deny the defendant’s request for a venue transfer and should instead rely on a thorough voir dire to protect the defendant’s right to an impartial jury.

VI. A Jury Questionnaire Is Not Necessary in This Case.

Bledsoe also contends that this Court should use a jury questionnaire in selecting a jury. ECF 190 at 12. The defendant is incorrect. Although this Court has discretion to use a written questionnaire, it need not do so because it can select an impartial jury using only in-person voir dire.<sup>8</sup> Issues of pre-trial publicity and potential prejudice are more meaningfully explored by in-person examination than by use of a jury questionnaire. “[W]ritten answers [do] not give counsel or the court any exposure to the demeanor of the juror in answering the . . . questions.” Mu’Min, 500 U.S. at 425. A prospective juror’s tone of voice and demeanor are important. See Rosales-Lopez, 451 U.S. at 188 (observing that the court “must reach conclusions” based on its “own evaluation[] of demeanor evidence and of response to questions”). Indeed, “[h]ow a person says something can be as telling as what a person says.” United States v. Jackson, 863 F. Supp. 1449, 1459 (D. Kan. 1994); see also Mu’Min, 500 U.S. at 433 (O’Connor, J., concurring) (“A particular juror’s tone of voice or demeanor might have suggested to the trial judge that the juror had formed an opinion about the case and should therefore be excused.”). And even where a questionnaire is used, in-person follow-up questioning is important to give the court the “face-to-face opportunity to gauge demeanor and credibility.” Skilling, 561 U.S. at 395. A jury questionnaire would not materially assist jury selection in this case, since there is no suggestion that this particular defendant has received significant, unfavorable pretrial publicity, and any potential prejudice due to general media coverage of the events of January 6, 2021 can be adequately probed through in-person voir dire examination.

<sup>8</sup> Some judges in this District have used written questionnaires to aid in screening potential jurors in particular cases. See, e.g., United States v. Stone, --- F. Supp. 3d ---, 2020 WL 1892360, at *2-3 (D.D.C. Apr. 16, 2020); United States v. Lorenzana-Cordon, No. 03-CR-331, 2016 WL 11664054, at *1 (D.D.C. Feb. 22, 2016). And one judge has granted a request to use a questionnaire in a January 6 trial that has not yet occurred. United States v. Alford, 21-cr-263, ECF No. 46 at 15 (D.D.C. Apr. 18, 2022) (TSC). But the practice is not common in this District.

CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons, the defendant’s motion to transfer venue should be denied.
