JESSICA WATKINS)

CLARIFICATION TO DEFENDANT’S MOTION FOR RELEASE AND ADDITIONAL LETTER OF SUPPORT

Jessica Watkins, through counsel, respectfully submits this clarification to her motion for release pending the outcome of her case. Counsel apologizes for being less than clear on a couple of points raised in the original motion – something that unfortunately became obvious by media inquiries. Counsel in no way meant to imply that Ms. Watkins met with the Secret Service. A better verb would have been “encountered.” Ms. Watkins spoke with Secret Service members early in the day when she was coming through the check in point for the VIP area. The point counsel was attempting to make was that she encountered law enforcement, including Secret Service officer on her way to providing security for the rally. She was given directives about things she could and could not do, including directions to leave all tactical gear outside of the VIP area, and she abided by all of those directives. Ms. Watkins does not suggest that she has any direct knowledge that her role as security was sanctioned by anyone other than people involved in organizing the rally. She certainly did not mean to suggest that she was hired by the U.S. Secret Service to perform security. Counsel again apologizes for any confusion created by the inartful language used in the motion.

Second, Ms. Watkins wants the Court to know that she has not been mistreated by the staff at the D.C. Central Treatment Facility. To date, while in the custody of the D.C.

Department of Corrections, she has been treated with respect and dignity. That was not her experience prior to her arrival in the District of Columbia. Counsel has been contacted by the Butler County Sherriff's Department, which disputes the description of Ms. Watkins' treatment at their facility, but acknowledges she was placed on suicide protocols. Ms. Watkins denies ever being suicidal or expressing suicidal thoughts, and stands by her assertions that she was placed on suicide watch for retaliatory reasons despite repeated assertions that she was not suicidal.

Finally, Counsel is attaching an additional letter of support that arrived after the prior submission.

Respectfully submitted,

To those who will listen:

Jessica Watkins has been a friend to me for many years; at one point she was just another member of my family, and I considered her a sister. The Jess that I know pre-dates the events of January 6th and you cannot imagine my disappointment and confusion as I have followed her story in the news.

That said, I believe that I still know Jess well enough to assert the following: Jess loves her country, and is a proud American, and for her to have committed to such an extreme event, she must have truly, truly believed she was doing what was best for all Americans. I am not saying that I condone or agree with any of her actions, or her statements private or public, but I ask you to consider that she had intent to do good that day, and that her intent to do good was manipulated by forces more deeply involved in insurrection, and that she never intended to become a terrorist.

Since I have known Jess, she has always struggled to find her place in a world that has let her down time and again. When I met her, she was already an ex-soldier, and after some time I learned why she couldn't be very public with her military service. Not because she wasn't proud to have been in the Army, but the Army wasn't proud to have her. Yet that did not stop Jess from choosing to serve her country any way she could; later on in life Jess became a firefighter for Stoney Point fire department in North Carolina and saved many lives. It was a thankless job that she did not do for personal gain. She rendered aid to innumerable civilians in need while she struggled to keep her own lights on at home. She was a well respected and, to my knowledge, decorated member of her department.

Even after her separation from the department, Jess was avid in her attempts to give back to the community. I remember taking photographs when Lakeview Apartments caught fire; Jess had noticed the smoke and we went over because she was insistent on lending her skills to the active firefighters at the scene. She filled air bottles and gave first aid to any who needed it, even though she was only there as a volunteer. She is a kind person with a servant's heart. When she moved to Ohio, she finally started getting a foothold in life, and even at this critical stage where she needed every penny she could save, Jess thought of others and provided a platform for my wife and I to start our own life. And while we later had a falling out, I know that her intentions were always noble and that my friend had not changed at her core.

In the months that followed, through sparse communications, I learned that Jess had been attending some of the protests around the country, again to render aid to civilians in need. I believe that she did this because she still has a servant's heart, and because she loves America and Americans. I have to believe that surreptitious and untrustworthy individuals played on the stresses of Jess's life and manipulated her to take advantage of her many skills. I have to believe that Jess would have never participated in the attack on the 6th if she had not been so purposefully misguided by those who stood to wield her experience as a weapon against this country. For lack of a better term, I believe my friend was brainwashed by those deeply entrenched in conspiratorial beliefs, and that (as has been a matter of record with her) Jess's feelings outpaced her brain.

My friend is an idiot, and I have never been more angry or upset with her in my life, but I do not believe that she wanted to become a terrorist that day. I don't believe that she is wholly unaccountable for her actions – nor do I believe she should or would want to be – but I urge the court from my humble place as an ordinary citizen to show the mercy that I know Americans are capable of.

I know that given the opportunity, Jess can be trusted to return and stand trial. I would argue that it is of critical importance that she be given the opportunity to return to reality and seek deprogramming beforehand. I believe that Jess can learn from her mistakes and will willingly take any punishment that she has earned, and that she is not a danger to her community. Please consider granting her bail. Thank you for your time.
