

UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT FOR THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA	:
	:	Case No. 22-cr-92 (DLF)
v.	:
BRIAN GLENN BINGHAM,	:
Defendant.	:

UNITED STATES' MOTIONS *IN LIMINE

The United States respectfully submits this omnibus brief arguing motions in limine in advance of the trial in this case scheduled for November 14, 2023. Although neither the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure nor the Federal Rules of Evidence expressly contemplate motions in limine, the practice of allowing such motions has developed over time “pursuant to the district court’s inherent authority to manage the course of trials.” Luce v. United States, 469 U.S. 38, 41 n. 4 (1984). “Motions in limine are designed to narrow the evidentiary issues for trial and to eliminate unnecessary trial interruptions.” Barnes v. D.C., 924 F. Supp. 2d 74, 78 (D.D.C. 2013) (quoting Graves v. District of Columbia, 850 F. Supp. 2d 6, 10 (D.D.C. 2011)).

The government offers the authorities and analysis below to promote efficiency and reduce the need to argue objections mid-trial. For each motion herein, the United States asks that the Court grant the requested relief or, if the Court reserves ruling, to consider the below arguments when the relevant issues arise during trial.

I. Motion in Limine to Admit Certain Categories of Multimedia

The government anticipates introducing certain categories of photographic and video exhibits at trial. For example, such evidence includes video obtained from: (1) closed circuit television monitoring (CCTV) at the United States Capitol Building, (2) body worn cameras (BWCs) worn by police officers responding to the Capitol on January 6, 2021, (3) the Cable-Satellite Public Affairs Network (CSPAN) footage of proceedings which took place in the Senate and the House on January 6, 2021, and (4) open sources such as social networking sites or news media agencies. The following sections describe each category of evidence and explain why each is admissible as relevant and authentic.

A. Legal Framework

“As a general rule, tangible evidence such as photographs must be properly identified or authenticated before being admitted into evidence at trial.” United States v. Blackwell, 694 F.2d 1325, 1329 (D.C. Cir. 1982) (citations omitted). To satisfy this requirement, “the proponent must produce evidence sufficient to support a finding that the item is what the proponent claims it is.” Fed. R. Evid. 901(a). Rule 901(b) provides a non-exhaustive list of examples of methods for showing authenticity. Those include, as relevant here:

(1) Testimony of a Witness with Knowledge. Testimony that an item is what it is claimed to be.

(3) Comparison by an Expert Witness or the Trier of Fact. A comparison with an authenticated specimen by an expert witness or the trier of fact.

(4) Distinctive Characteristics and the Like. The appearance, contents, substance, internal patterns, or other distinctive characteristics of the item, taken together with all the circumstances.

(7) Evidence About Public Records. Evidence that: (A) a document was recorded or filed in a public office as authorized by law; or (B) a purported public record or statement is from the office where items of this kind are kept.

(9) Evidence About a Process or System. Evidence describing a process or system and showing that it produces an accurate result.

Fed. R. Evid. 901(b)(1), (3), (4), (7), (9).

In making the showing necessary for admissibility, “the proponent’s burden of proof” is “slight,” and the “ultimate resolution of the evidence’s authenticity is reserved for the jury.” United States v. Hassanshahi, 195 F. Supp. 3d 35, 48 (D.D.C. 2016) (quoting McQueeney v. Wilmington Tr. Co., 779 F.2d 916, 928 (3d Cir.1985); United States v. Safavian, 435 F. Supp. 2d 36, 38 (D.D.C. 2006)). To make the requisite prima facie showing, “circumstantial evidence of authenticity can be sufficient.” United States v. Bruner, 657 F.2d 1278, 1284 (D.C. Cir. 1981). And such evidence need not “rule out all possibilities inconsistent with authenticity, or to prove beyond any doubt that the evidence is what it purports to be,” Hassanshahi, 195 F. Supp. 3d at 48 (citing United States v. Pluta, 176 F.3d 43, 49 (2d Cir. 1999) (internal quotation marks and citation omitted)). Rather, the party offering the evidence need only “demonstrate that, as a matter of reasonable probability, possibilities of misidentification and adulteration have been eliminated.” United States v. Celis, 608 F.3d 818, 842 (D.C. Cir. 2010) (quoting United States v. Stewart, 104 F.3d 1377, 1383 (D.C. Cir. 1997) (internal quotation marks omitted)).

B. Overlapping Bases for Admissibility of Multimedia

As introduced herein, there are multiple, overlapping bases that the government intends to use for the authentication and introduction of photographs and videos at trial. The government offers this non-exclusive list of bases for authentication should the government be unable to enter into stipulations with the defendants in advance of trial.

1. Authentication by a Witness with Knowledge

To begin, any witness with knowledge of the events depicted in a photograph or video can authenticate the evidence, including but not limited to the person who took the photograph or video. See Fed. R. Evid. 901(b)(1). Here, that includes any person who was present for the events depicted in the photograph or video and has a recollection sufficient for them to recognize the scene depicted. See, e.g., Am. Wrecking Corp. v. Sec'y of Lab., 351 F.3d 1254, 1262 (D.C. Cir. 2003). Any individual that observed the events depicted in the photograph or video can testify that the photograph or video appears to fairly and accurately show the events that took place. See Fed. R. Evid. 901(b)(1); see also United States v. Rembert, 863 F.2d 1023, 1026 (D.C. Cir. 1988) (citing, e.g., Simms v. Dixon, 291 A.2d 184 (D.C. 1972); E. Cleary, McCormick on Evidence (3d ed. 1984) at 671).

Even a person who was not present for a specific event can circumstantially establish the authenticity of a photograph or video depicting that event if they can (1) identify the location(s) depicted in the video; and (2) establish that the video is generally consistent with their knowledge of events that occurred during the Capitol riot. See, e.g., Rembert, 863 F. 2d at 1028 (“Even if direct testimony as to foundation matters is absent . . . the contents of a photograph itself, together with such other circumstantial or indirect evidence as bears upon the issue, may serve to explain and authenticate a photograph sufficiently to justify its admission into evidence.” (quoting United States v. Stearns, 550 F.2d 1167, 1171 (9th Cir. 1977) (Kennedy, J.))); Holmquist, 36 F.3d at 169 (“A photograph’s contents, buttressed by indirect or circumstantial evidence, can form a sufficient basis for authentication even without the testimony of the photographer or some other person who was present at the time it was taken.”). On this authority the government could authenticate riot footage through, for example, the testimony of an experienced Capitol Police officer who is familiar with all areas of the Capitol and who knows that the events of January 6 are unique in modern history. Cf. United States v. Safavian, 435 F. Supp.2d 36 (D.D.C. 2006) (authenticating emails based on “distinctive characteristics” and citing Fed. R. Evid. 901(b)(4)); Klayman v. Judicial Watch, 299 F. Supp. 3d 141 (D.D.C. 2018) (admitting emails and advertisements by comparing later versions with admitted versions). Again, this is a low bar that requires only a prima facie showing that the evidence is what the government purports it to be — namely, photographs and videos of the Capitol siege in progress.

2. Authentication by Metadata

Where necessary, the government can also authenticate the specific time or place of a photograph or video using metadata. When a digital media file is extracted from a device or otherwise seized by the government, it often contains metadata that specifies the time, and sometimes place, the file was created, along with other information. At trial, the government may call law enforcement personnel to testify about the process of extracting data from digital devices and reviewing the extracted materials. Such testimony is sufficient to make a prima facie showing that a photograph or video was made at the time or place reflected in the metadata. See, e.g., United States v. Banks, 43 F.4th 912, 918 (8th Cir. 2022) (“While the officers were not present when the images and videos were first captured, their testimony [about reviewing extraction reports] provided a rational basis to believe that the exhibits had been created within the relevant time frame and stored on [the defendant’s] cellular phones.”); Lorraine v. Markel Am. Ins. Co., 241 F.R.D. 534, 547-48 (D. Md. 2007) (“Because metadata shows the date, time and identity of the creator of an electronic record, as well as all changes made to it, metadata is a distinctive characteristic of all electronic evidence that can be used to authenticate it under Rule 901(b)(4).”); United States v. Gilbreath, No. 3:19-CR-127-TAV-HBG, 2020 WL 5441226, at *3 (E.D. Tenn. Sept. 10, 2020) (“Metadata . . . showed that these images were created at defendant’s home and on defendant’s cell phone on September 12, 2015.”).

3. Authentication by Comparison

Similarly, and alternatively, in instances where precision of time and place is relevant but cannot be established by a witness with knowledge or by the media’s metadata, the government will authenticate exhibits by reference to other, already-authenticated exhibits depicting the same time and place. This method of authentication by comparison is routine. United States v. Hoyt, 946 F.2d 127, at *1 (D.C. Cir. 1991) (noting that Fed. R. Evid. 901(b)(3) permits authentication by comparison); Valve Corp. v. Ironburg Inventions Ltd., 8 F.4th 1364, 1371 (Fed. Cir. Aug. 17, 2021); Stearns, 550 F.2d at 1171-72 (finding that first picture “authenticates the other four pictures as to time”); Safavian, 435 F. Supp. 2d at 40 (allowing authentication of emails by means of comparison with other “emails that already have been independently authenticated”).

4. Authentication Based on Process or System that Produces an Accurate Result

Certain multimedia, such as CCTV operated by the U.S. Capitol Police (USCP) and BWC worn by officers of the Metropolitan Police Department (MPD) can be authenticated under Fed. R. Evid. 901(b)(9) by “describing a process or system and showing that it produces an accurate result.” See United States v. Dale, 991 F.2d 819, 843 (D.C. Cir. 1993) (“Tapes may be authenticated by testimony describing the process or system that created the tape”); United States v. Pinke, 614 F. App’x 651, 653 (4th Cir. 2015) (unpub.) (finding “sufficient evidence of authentication” of a prison’s closed circuit video where “a Government witness explained the manner in which the prison’s closed circuit video system operates, the means by which he obtained the video, and that he downloaded it onto the DVD that was played for the jury”). Several USCP and MPD witnesses are available to testify to the systems employed by USCP and MPD, respectively. These witnesses will be able to explain how the system is used, that it reliably records and depicts the areas that the camera faces, and the internal characteristics of videos — such as date and time stamps — which allow USCP and MPD to identify and retrieve segments of video.

5. Authentication Based on Status as an “Official Publication”

Certain evidence in this case, such as video taken by the Senate Recording Studio (CSPAN), is also “self-authenticating,” meaning it “require[s] no extrinsic evidence of authenticity in order to be admitted.” Fed. R. Evid. 902.<sup>1</sup> This is so because it qualifies as an “Official Publication[],” defined as any “book, pamphlet, or other publication purporting to be issued by a public authority.” Fed. R. Evid. 902(5). Official materials published on government websites fall into this category and are self-authenticating under Rule 902. See Williams v. Long, 585 F. Supp. 2d 679, 689 (D. Md. 2008); cf. MMA Consultants 1, Inc. v. Republic of Peru, 245 F. Supp. 3d 486 (S.D.N.Y. 2017) (Congressional transcripts); Singletary v. Howard Univ., No. 1:17-cv-01198, 2018 WL 4623569, at *4 n.1 (D.D.C., Sept. 26, 2018) rev’d on other grounds (government-issued guidebook).

The United States Senate uses the Senate Recording Studio to contemporaneously record Senate proceedings and distribute those recordings to the public. See <https://www.senate.gov/floor/>, last accessed August 7, 2023 (publicly available archived recordings of Senate Recording Studio). The Senate Recording Studio recorded the proceedings relating to the Electoral College Certification on January 6, 2021, up to the point when the rioters breached the building and forced the proceedings into recess. See id. (proceedings for January 6, 2021). Subsequently, the Senate Recording Studio recorded the Electoral College Certification proceedings after the rioters were cleared from the Capitol Building and the session resumed. Id. During the interim, the Senate Recording Studio captured footage of rioters who were present on the Senate floor during the recess.

C. Categories of Multimedia to be Offered

The government plans to introduce certain videos and photos recovered from the defendant’s phone and social media accounts,<sup>2</sup> as well as videos and photographs taken by third parties such as

<sup>1</sup> Further underscoring the multiple paths to authentication, it is worth noting that Senate Recording Studio footage may also be authenticated through any of the mechanisms outlined in this motion, including Fed. R. Evid. 901(b)(1), (3), (4), (9).

<sup>2</sup> The government intends to introduce videos, images, and statements made by the defendant on social media. The purpose of such evidence will be to provide evidence of his consciousness of wrongfulness. The relevance of such evidence depends on the government’s authenticating the relevant accounts as actually belonging to the defendant, which it will readily accomplish. The government can prove a defendant’s ownership of a social media account using “circumstantial other rioters and journalists who were present inside and outside the Capitol on January 6. Among other ways, these materials can be authenticated through the processes described in Sections I.B.1-3, supra.

The evidence at trial will also include video captured by law enforcement, including CCTV and BWC footage. Like any other videos, these can be authenticated by any person with direct knowledge of the scene depicted or with sufficient circumstantial knowledge (see Fed. R. Evid. 901(b)(1) and discussion supra at Section I.B.1) or through metadata or comparison (see Fed. R. Evid. 901(b)(4) and discussion supra at Section I.B.2-3). Alternatively, given the automated nature of the recording devices in question, the BWC and CCTV footage can be authenticated under Rule 901(b)(9), which allows authentication by “[e]vidence describing a process or system and showing that it produces an accurate result.” See United States v. Dale, 991 F.2d 819, 843 (D.C. Cir. 1993) (“Tapes may be authenticated by testimony describing the process or system that created the tape”); United States v. Pinke, 614 F. App’x 651, 653 (4th Cir. 2015) (unpub.) (finding “sufficient evidence of authentication” of a prison’s closed-circuit video where “a Government witness explained the manner in which the prison’s closed circuit video system operates, the means by which he obtained the video, and that he downloaded it onto the DVD that was played for the jury”).

The government also anticipates introducing videos captured by the Senate Recording Studio, which videos can be authenticated through any of the processes described herein, supra, at Section I.B.5.

evidence linking the defendant to the social media account.” United States v. Lamm, 5 F.4th 942, 948 (8th Cir. 2021). Such circumstantial evidence can include “the presence of a nickname, date of birth, address, email address, and photos.” United States v. Barber, 937 F.3d 965, 970-71 (7th Cir. 2019) (“This court has relied on evidence such as on someone’s Facebook page as circumstantial evidence that a page might belong to that person”); see also United States v. Bowens, 938 F.3d 790, 795 (6th Cir. 2019) (finding that photograph of defendants, and first name of one defendant, constituted sufficient “circumstantial evidence from which the jury could infer that the defendants were the ones posting” incriminating social media content).

II. Motions in Limine to Admit Certain Statutes and Records

A. Judicial Notice of the Federal Electoral College Certification Law

The proceedings that took place on January 6, 2021, were mandated by, and directed under the authority of, several constitutional and federal statutory provisions. In fact, as Vice President Pence gave the Senate to Order on January 6, 2021 to proceed with the Electoral College Certification Official Proceeding, he quoted directly from, and cited to, Title 3, United States Code, Section 17.

The government requests that the Court take judicial notice of, and admit into evidence, copies of Article II, Section 1 of the Constitution of the United States, the Twelfth Amendment, as well as 3 U.S.C. §§ 15-18 relating to the Electoral College Certification Official Proceedings. It is well established that district courts may take judicial notice of law “without plea or proof.” See United States v. Davila-Nieves, 670 F.3d 1, 7 (1st Cir. 2012). The government makes this request even though “no motion is required in order for the court to take judicial notice.” Moore v. Reno, No. 00-5180, 2000 WL 1838862, at *1 (D.D.C. Nov. 14, 2000). Further, “where a federal prosecution hinges on an interpretation or application of state law, it is the district court’s function to explain the relevant state law to the jury.” See United States v. Fazal-Ur-Raheman-Fazal, 355 F.3d 40, 49 (1st Cir. 2004).

B. Admission of the Congressional Record and S. Con. Res 1

The Congressional proceedings on January 6, 2021, were memorialized in the Congressional Record. The Congressional Record is a public record under Federal Rule of Evidence 902(5). See MMA Consultants 1, Inc. v. Republic of Peru, 245 F. Supp. 3d 486 (S.D.N.Y. 2017). The government intends to introduce portions of the Congressional Record at trial, including the bodies’ “concurrent resolution to provide for the counting on January 6, 2021, of the electoral votes for President and Vice President of the United States.” S. Con. Res. 1, 117th Cong. (2021). For the same reasons as the Senate Recording Studios footage above, these records should be admitted as self-authenticating.

III. Motions in Limine to Limit Unnecessary Discussion of Security-Related Topics

Certain topics that could arise at trial — namely the exact locations of USCP CCTV cameras and the protocols of the U.S. Secret Service (USSS) — have little to no probative value but would compromise significant security interests if needlessly disclosed to the public. The government does not intend to elicit any of the following topics in its case-in-chief and, therefore, cross-examination on such topics would be beyond the scope of direct and impermissible. Fed. R. Evid. 611(b). To the extent that the defendant seeks to argue that any of the following topics are relevant and within the scope of the government’s examination, the government requests an order under Fed. R. Evid. 403 foreclosing unnecessary cross-examination on these topics.

It is well-established that a district court has the discretion to limit a criminal defendant’s presentation of evidence and cross-examination of witnesses. See Alford v. United States, 282 U.S. 687 (1931) (“The extent of cross-examination [of a witness] with respect to an appropriate subject of inquiry is within the sound discretion of the trial court.”); United States v. Whitmore, 359 F.3d 609, 615-16 (D.C. Cir. 2004) (“The district court . . . has considerable discretion to place reasonable limits on a criminal defendant’s presentation of evidence and cross-examination of government witnesses.”). A court has the discretion to prohibit cross-examination that goes beyond matters testified to on direct examination. Fed. R. Evid. 611(b). This is particularly so when the information at issue is of a sensitive nature. See, e.g., United States v. Balistreri, 779 F.2d 1191, 1216-17 (7th Cir. 1985) (upholding district court’s decision to prohibit cross-examination of agent about sensitive information about which that agent did not testify on direct examination and which did not pertain to the charges in the case), overruled on other grounds by Fowler v. Butts, 829 F.3d 788 (7th Cir. 2016).

The Confrontation Clause only guarantees “an opportunity for effective cross-examination, not cross-examination that is effective in whatever way, and to whatever extent, the defense might wish.” Delaware v. Fensterer, 474 U.S. 15, 20 (1985). Even evidence that may be relevant to an affirmative defense should be excluded until the defendant sufficiently establishes that defense through affirmative evidence presented during his own case-in-chief. See United States v. Lin, 101 F.3d 760, 768 (D.C. Cir. 1996) (acknowledging trial court has discretion to limit cross-examination on prejudicial matters without reasonable grounding in fact); United States v. Sampol, 636 F.2d 621, 663-64 (D.C. Cir. 1980) (holding that trial court properly limited cross-examination of alleged CIA murder scheme until defense put forth sufficient evidence of the affirmative defense in its case-in-chief). Preventing the defendants from exploring the topics identified above will not infringe their Confrontation Clause right because the exact positions of cameras, the camera map, and U.S. Secret Service protocols, implicate national security concerns, are of marginal probative value, and any probative value can be addressed without compromising the protective functions of government agencies.

A. Exact Locations of USCP Cameras

The government seeks an order limiting the defense from probing, during cross-examination, the exact locations of Capitol Police surveillance cameras or from using the maps, which show each camera's physical location, as an exhibit at trial. The government produced such information to defendants in discovery pursuant to the Highly Sensitive designation of the Protective Order. See ECF No. 18. The defendant has been able to make use of such information in order to identify evidence and prepare for trial; however, none of the information serves to illuminate any fact of consequence that is before the jury.

This lack of relevance must be balanced against the national security implications at stake here. The U.S. Capitol Police's surveillance system serves an important and ongoing function in protecting Congress, and therefore, national security. Furthermore, the government represents that the maps that show the physical location of cameras have been designated as "Security Information" under 2 U.S.C. § 1979, which generally requires approval of the Capitol Police Board before they may be released.

Evidence about the exact locations of cameras, and the maps used to locate the cameras, should be excluded in light of the ongoing security needs of Congress. Absent some concrete and specific defense need to probe the camera's location, there is nothing to be gained from such questioning. A general description, and the footage from the camera itself, will make clear what the camera recorded and what it did not. Additionally, presenting the map of all Capitol Police cameras would risk compromising these security concerns for no additional probative value: the map contains numerous cameras installed in parts of the Capitol that the defendants did not visit.

Here, the video footage itself reveals the general location and angle of the camera's positioning. Additional details as to the precise location of the cameras are not relevant to the jury's fact-finding mission. Even assuming the evidence that the government seeks to exclude is marginally relevant, such relevance is substantially outweighed by the danger to national security. The Supreme Court has recognized that trial courts' balancing should account for concerns extrinsic to the litigation, such as "witness' safety." Olden v. Kentucky, 488 U.S. 227, 232 (1988). Accordingly, courts have properly balanced the sensitivity of national security-related information against the probative value of such information to the case, excluding the evidence where its relevance is slight. See, e.g., United States v. Marshall, 544 F. Supp. 3d 1032, 1042 (D. Mont. 2021); United States v. Mohammed, 410 F. Supp. 2d 913, 918 (S.D. Cal. 2005); cf. United States v. Sarkissian, 841 F.2d 959, 965 (9th Cir. 1988) (endorsing balancing test in context of Classified Information Procedures Act). If a map that revealed the location of all Capitol cameras were introduced in this trial, or in any trial, it would become available to the general public and foreign adversaries. Immediately, anyone could learn about the Capitol Police's camera coverage as of January 6, 2021, and—importantly—could learn about the parts of the Capitol where cameras were not installed. Broader presentation of evidence about camera locations could compromise national security without adding any appreciable benefit to the determination of the truth, or the veracity or bias of witnesses. Id.

B. Secret Service Protocols

To meet its burden of proof at trial, the government will call a witness from the United States Secret Service to testify that at the time of the Capitol breach, Secret Service agents were on duty to protect Vice President Mike Pence and his two immediate family members, all of whom were present at the Capitol. The witness will further testify about the Capitol breach's effect on the Secret Service's protection of Vice President Pence and his family members.

The very nature of the Secret Service's role in protecting the Vice President and his family implicates sensitive information related to that agency's ability to protect high-ranking members of the Executive branch and, by extension, national security. Thus, the government seeks an order limiting the cross-examination of the Secret Service witnesses to questioning about the federally protected function performed by the Secret Service as testified to on direct exam, namely, protecting the Vice President and his family. The government further requests that such order preclude cross-examination that would elicit information that does not directly relate to whether the Secret Service was performing that function at the Capitol on January 6, 2021. Specifically, cross-examination should not be permitted to extend to (1) Secret Service protocols related to the locations where protectees or their motorcades are taken at the Capitol or other government buildings when emergencies occur, and (2) details about the nature of Secret Service protective details, such as the number and type of agents the Secret Service assigns to protectees. These topics have no relevance to any issue at controversy, and even if they did, any relevance would be substantially outweighed by the danger of prejudicing the government's legitimate interest in the safety of senior government officials. See Fed. R. Evid. 403.

The government intends to offer the testimony that pursuant to authority under 18 U.S.C. § 3056(a)(1), on January 6, 2021, Secret Service agents were at the Capitol to protect Vice President Mike Pence and two members of his immediate family. A Secret Service official is further expected to explain how the events at the Capitol on that date affected the Secret Service's ability to protect Vice President Pence and his family. This testimony will both explain—in part—the bases for enhanced security controls at the Capitol on January 6 as well as establish an element of the charge at Count Two, i.e., that the civil disorder at the Capitol on January 6 interfered with a federally protected function.

Cross-examination of Secret Service witnesses about extraneous matters beyond the scope of direct examination should be excluded as irrelevant or unduly prejudicial. Specifically, the Secret Service's general protocols about relocation for safety should be excluded as irrelevant because such evidence does not tend to make a fact of consequence more or less probable. Fed. R. Evid. 401 (defining relevant evidence). Similarly, evidence of the nature of Secret Service protective details is not relevant in this case. The disorder on January 6 interfered with the Secret Service's duties to protectees in this case insofar as they were required to take evasive action of the mob. The number or type of assigned agents on a protective detail is simply not relevant and could not alter the probability that there was interference with the Secret Service. None of the other elements to be proven, or available defenses, implicates further testimony from the Secret Service.

Even assuming the evidence to be excluded is marginally relevant, such relevance is substantially outweighed by the danger of confusion of the issues, mini-trials, undue delay, and waste of time. Broader cross-examination of Secret Service witnesses could compromise national security without adding any appreciable benefit to the determination of the truth, or the veracity or bias of witnesses. Id.<sup>3</sup>

<sup>3</sup> If the defense believes that it is necessary to present evidence or cross-examine witnesses about the exact locations of USCP cameras or USSS procedures, the government requests that the Court conduct a hearing in camera to resolve the issue. Courts have found that in camera proceedings are appropriate in circumstances where security concerns like these are present. See United States v. Nixon, 418 U.S. 683, 714 (1974) (affirming district court's order for in camera inspection of

IV. Motion in Limine to Preclude Improper Defense Arguments

A. First Amendment

The United States moves this Court to admit in its case-in-chief statements that evince the defendant's motive or intent, or which go to prove an element of any offense with which he is charged. The government also moves in limine to preclude the defense from eliciting evidence or arguing to the jury that his statements and actions were protected by the First Amendment.

1. Admission of Defendant's Statements Does Not Violate the First Amendment

The government intends to introduce several statements, made by the defendant, that will aid the jury's determination as to whether the government has met the elements to show intent. See Mitchell, 508 U.S. at 489 (the First Amendment "does not prohibit the evidentiary use of speech to establish the elements of a crime or to prove motive or intent"). "Evidence of a defendant's previous declarations or statements is commonly admitted in criminal trials subject to evidentiary rules dealing with relevancy, reliability, and the like." Id. Accordingly, the government asks that the Court rule that the First Amendment does not bar admission at trial of any statement that the government offers to establish the defendant's intent or an element of the crime.

Courts across the country, including this Court's colleagues in January 6th cases, have allowed evidence of defendant's statements for the purposes sanctioned by Mitchell. As Judge Cooper ruled: subpoenaed presidential materials); United States v. Kampiles, 609 F.2d 1233, 1248 (7th Cir. 1979) ("It is settled that in camera . . . proceedings to evaluate bona fide Government claims regarding national security information are proper."); In re Taylor, 567 F.2d 1183, 1188 (2d Cir. 1977) (finding that in camera proceedings "serve to resolve, without disclosure, the conflict between the threatened deprivation of a party's constitutional rights and the Government's claim of privilege based on the needs of public security"); United States v. Brown, 539 F.2d 467, 470 (5th Cir. 1976) (per curiam) (same). At any such hearing, the defendant should be required to make a specific proffer of some relevant purpose that is not substantially outweighed by the prejudice that disclosure would inflict on the government's security interests. Cf. United States v. Willie, 941 F.2d 1384, 1393 (10th Cir. 1991) (explaining that a "proffer of great specificity" was necessary to support admission of testimony that could have proper or improper purposes).

Nor does the Court find any First Amendment concerns in the government’s use of Robertson’s statements to show intent. . . . If Robertson had expressed his views only through social media, he almost certainly would not be here. But he also allegedly took action—entering the Capitol without lawful authority in an alleged attempt to impede the Electoral College vote certification. His words remain relevant to his intent and motive for taking those alleged actions.

United States v. Robertson, 588 F. Supp. 3d 114, 124 (D.D.C. 2022) (internal citation omitted). Outside of the context of January 6th, Mitchell has been cited to uphold the admission of a wide range of statements, including but not limited to rap lyrics, terrorist materials, and speeches advocating civil disobedience. United States v. Smith, 967 F.3d 1196, 1205 (11th Cir. 2020) (rap lyrics); United States v. Pierce, 785 F.3d 832, 841 (2d Cir. 2015) (“This challenge is meritless, however, because here the speech is not ‘itself the proscribed conduct.’ The speech was not the basis for the prosecution, but instead it was used to establish the existence of, and [defendant’s] participation in, the alleged RICO enterprise.”) (internal citation omitted) (rap lyrics and tattoos); United States v. Salameh, 152 F.3d 88, 111-12 (2d Cir. 1998) (the defendants were not “prosecuted for possessing or reading terrorist materials. The materials seized . . . were used appropriately to prove the existence of the bombing conspiracy and its motive”); United States v. Fullmer, 584 F.3d 132, 158 (9th Cir. 2009) (speeches advocating civil disobedience).

The defendant’s statements that shed light on the elements of the offenses, or motive or intent, should be admitted in this case as expressly permitted by Mitchell, regardless of whether any of those statements may otherwise constitute speech protected by the First Amendment.

2. Defendant Should be Precluded from Raising a First Amendment Defense to the Jury

The government also moves in limine to preclude the defendant from arguing to the jury that his conduct was protected by the First Amendment. None of the offenses with which the defendant is charged punish speech, as crimes such as threats or solicitation do. “No matter [the rioter’s] political motivations or any political message they wished to express, this alleged conduct is simply not protected by the First Amendment.” United States v. Nordean, 579 F. Supp. 3d 28, 53 (D.D.C. 2021).

If the government establishes the elements of any of the offenses with which the defendant is charged, the First Amendment provides them no defense, even if evidence of the defendant’s crimes is intertwined with political discussion and/or rhetoric. See United States v. Amawi, 695 F.3d 457, 482 (6th Cir. 2012) (“[A]lthough the conspiracy was closely related to, and indeed proved by, many of the defendants’ conversations about political and religious matters, the conviction was based on an agreement to cooperate in the commission a crime, not simply to talk about it”); see also United States v. Hassan, 742 F.3d 104, 127-28 (4th Cir. 2014) (citing Amawi).

Accordingly, any line of cross-examination or argument that the defendant may wish to make regarding the First Amendment is irrelevant under Fed. R. Evid. 401 because it lacks a “tendency to make the existence of [a] fact that is of consequence to the determination of the action more probable or less probable than it would be without the evidence” and because she is not entitled to a First Amendment defense as a matter of law. To the extent there is any relevance to the defendant’s First Amendment claims, the Court should exclude any questioning and argument along those lines under Fed. R. Evid. 403. Any attempt to shift the jury’s attention to questions about whether the defendant’s statements were protected by the First Amendment, rather than the charged offenses risks confusing the issues, wasting time, and unfairly prejudicing the jury.

B. Charging Decisions and Selective Prosecution

The United States moves in limine to exclude all evidence and arguments regarding its charging decisions. The Supreme Court has recognized that the “Attorney General and United States Attorneys retain ‘broad discretion’ to enforce the Nation’s criminal laws.” United States v. Armstrong, 517 U.S. 456, 464 (1996) (citing Wayte v. United States, 470 U.S. 596, 607 (1985)). “They have this latitude because they are designated by statute as the President’s delegates to help him discharge his constitutional responsibility to ‘take Care that the Laws be faithfully executed.’” Armstrong, 517 U.S. at 464 (citing U.S. Const. Art. II, § 3); see 28 U.S.C. §§ 516, 547. As a general matter, “so long as the prosecutor has probable cause to believe that the accused committed an offense defined by statute, the decision whether or not to prosecute, and what charge to file or bring before a grand jury, generally rests entirely in his discretion.” Bordenkircher v. Hayes, 434 U.S. 357, 364 (1978); see also United States v. Batchelder, 442 U.S. 114, 124-25 (1979) (“Selectivity in the enforcement of criminal laws is, of course, subject to constitutional constraints.”).

The defendant should be precluded from introducing evidence or making arguments regarding charging decisions made by the United States. To the extent that the defendant seeks to present evidence or arguments that other individuals have not been charged for related conduct and/or that it is unfair that he has been charged, while other individuals involved in related criminal conduct remain uncharged or charged with lesser offenses, such evidence is irrelevant, inadmissible, and only serves to divert the jury’s attention to matters unrelated to rendering a fair and just verdict.

C. Jury Nullification: Penalties and Collateral Consequences

The defendant should be prohibited from making arguments or attempting to introduce irrelevant evidence that encourages jury nullification. As the D.C. Circuit has made clear,

A jury has no more “right” to find a “guilty” defendant “not guilty” than it has to find a “not guilty” defendant “guilty,” and the fact that the former cannot be corrected by a court, while the latter can be, does not create a right out of the power to misapply the law. Such verdicts are lawless, a denial of due process and constitute an exercise of erroneously seized power.

United States v. Washington, 705 F.2d 489, 494 (D.C. Cir. 1983). Evidence that only serves to support a jury nullification argument or verdict has no relevance to guilt or innocence. See United States v. Gorham, 523 F.2d 1088, 1097-98 (D.C. Cir. 1975); see also United States v. Funches, 135 F.3d 1405, 1409 (11th Cir. 1998) (“No reversible error is committed when evidence, otherwise inadmissible under Rule 402 of the Federal Rules of Evidence, is excluded, even if the evidence might have encouraged the jury to disregard the law and to acquit the defendant”).

In particular, the Court should permit no argument, evidence, or questioning regarding the potential penalties faced by a defendant are irrelevant to the jury’s verdict. See Shannon v. United States, 512 U.S. 573, 579 (1994) (“[A] jury has no sentencing function, it should be admonished to ‘reach its verdict without regard to what sentence might be imposed.’” (quoting United States v. Rogers, 422 U.S. 35, 40 (1975))). Accordingly, the D.C. Circuit has held that “the jury is not to consider the potential punishment which could result from a conviction.” United States v. Broxton, 926 F.2d 1180, 1183 (D.C. Cir. 1991). Any discussion of possible penalties would serve no purpose beside improperly inviting the jury to render a verdict based on sympathy for the defendants – that is, to engage in jury nullification. See United States v. Bell, 506 F.2d 207, 226 (D.C. Cir. 1974) (“[E]vidence which has the effect of inspiring sympathy for the defendant or for the victim ... is prejudicial and inadmissible when otherwise irrelevant”) (internal citation omitted); United States v. White, 225 F. Supp. 514, 519 (D.D.C. 1963) (“The proffered testimony (which was clearly designed solely to arouse sympathy for defendant) was thus properly excluded.”).

The same goes for any evidence or argument concerning possible collateral consequences of conviction. Such issues and arguments have no place in this trial and no bearing on the guilt or innocence of the defendant.

CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons, the United States asks that the Court grant the requested relief or, if the Court reserves ruling, to consider the below arguments when the relevant issues arise during trial.
