W1 was fascinated with the interior of the Capitol. She heard a stanchion fall to the floor. W1 shouted, telling people not to destroy anything.

W1 entered an open office [Interviewer's note: W1 did not know it at this time, but she had entered the Office of the Speaker of the House, Nancy Pelosi]. While W1 was in the office, someone said this is Nancy Pelosi's office. W1 sat at a desk and put her feet up on the desk. W1 saw a man enter the office, throw items off of another desk, and sit at that desk. He was accompanied by another man wearing a gas mask, who he was instructing to take photographs. The man instructed the man wearing the gas mask to take a photo of W1 at the desk. W1 made a call over Facetime to her cousin, [REDACTED]. She told them what was happening and both her cousin and father laughed. Four or five people came into the office while W1 was there.

W1 wrote, "You're fired", on a notebook that was on the desk. On a preceding page of the notebook someone else had written, "Kiss D.C. away."

She decided it would be a good souvenir, and she took the baseball from the dish. Later that day, W1 realized the baseball was signed, although she could not make out the name of the signer. At that time, she became worried and realized she should not have taken the ball. W1 also took a Papermate pen from the office.

Later that night, W1 met [REDACTED] in his hotel room. W1 was scared because she had stolen the baseball. She gave [REDACTED] the baseball and asked him to hold onto it for her, with the idea that he could give it back to her at a later time. The next day, after speaking with her attorney, W1 and her attorney contacted [REDACTED] and asked him to turn the baseball over to the attorney. ERIC did so. At that time, ERIC was still in D.C.

W1 was shown a video of her in the Capitol opening and closing drawers of a credenza. W1 said she was looking for a souvenir to remember that day, but something of no real value. W1 did not see anyone else take any property from the Capitol, but did overhear someone say they had taken a bottle of wine from Nancy Pelosi's office. W1 estimates she spent
