FOR THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA :
 CASE NO. 21-cr-691-TSC
 v. :
 CHRISTIAN MATTHEW MANLEY, :
 Defendant. :

GOVERNMENT’S OPPOSITION TO DEFENDANT’S MOTION TO TRANSFER VENUE

Defendant Christian Matthew Manley, who is charged in connection with events at the U.S. Capitol on January 6, 2021, has moved to transfer venue in this case to another unspecified venue. The defendant fails to establish that he “cannot obtain a fair and impartial trial” in this district, Fed. R. Crim. P. 21(a), and this Court should deny his motion.¹

BACKGROUND

On January 6, 2021, a Joint Session of the United States House of Representatives and the United States Senate convened to certify the vote of the Electoral College of the 2020 U.S. Presidential Election. While the certification process was proceeding, a large crowd gathered

From approximately 2:45 to 5:05 p.m., rioters occupied the area of the Capitol known as the Lower West Terrace (“LWT”). In the center of the LWT is an archway leading to an entrance to the Capitol Building. During this period, Metropolitan Police Department (“MPD”) and U.S. Capitol Police (“USCP”) officers were defending the archway entrance from rioters attempting to break through and enter the Capitol.

From at least approximately 2:50 p.m., the defendant was among the rioters at the LWT. The defendant brought with him on January 6, 2021, two cans of bear deterrent/pepper spray, a collapsible police baton, and handcuffs. When first approaching the tunnel located in the LWT, the defendant was holding bear deterrent/pepper spray. The defendant was wearing a flak jacket, tan backpack, grey shirt, and baseball cap.

From his various positions in the LWT, the defendant could see rioters attacking the officers defending the archway with, among other things, baseball bats, pepper spray, riot shields, and poles.

At approximately 2:53 p.m., the defendant moved directly toward the archway of the tunnel in the LWT. Upon entering the archway, the defendant had the bear deterrent/pepper spray in his left hand and then moved it to his right hand. The defendant then sprayed the bear deterrent/pepper spray towards officers defending the tunnel. Immediately after emptying the spray, the defendant threw the bear deterrent/pepper spray canister towards officers.

The defendant then moved towards the rear of the archway where he assisted other rioters in removing police shields which were taken from officers and passed outside the tunnel to other rioters. The defendant passed at least three riot shields from inside the tunnel to other rioters outside the tunnel. While passing one of the shields, the defendant turned to the rioters outside the tunnel and yelled, "let's go!"

At approximately 2:55 p.m., the defendant again sprayed officers with bear deterrent/pepper spray. While the defendant was spraying the officers, other rioters were throwing objects at the officers protecting the tunnel

Again, once the bear deterrent/pepper spray canister was empty, the defendant threw the canister at the officers. In addition to throwing the two canisters towards officers, while in the tunnel, the defendant threw a pipe towards officers, as well as another unknown object. Further, the defendant assisted other rioters in passing police riot shields to other rioters to use against officers protecting the Capitol.

At approximately 2:57 p.m., the defendant made his way to the front of the tunnel where the doors are situated on the Capitol. The defendant positioned himself behind one of the doors, wedged his body against the wall, and pushed the door against officers protecting the Capitol.

At approximately 2:59 p.m., the defendant exited the tunnel while wiping his eyes. The defendant walked down the stairs of the LWT waving to other rioters for them to enter the archway.

Based on his actions on January 6, 2021, the defendant was charged with the following: Count One, 18 U.S.C. § 231(a)(3) (Civil Disorder); Count Two, 18 U.S.C. § 111(a)(1) (Assault, Resisting, or Impeding Certain Officers); Count Three, 18 U.S.C. § 111(a)(1) and (b) (Assaulting, Resisting, or Impeding Certain Officers Using a Dangerous Weapon); Count Four, 18 U.S.C. § 1752(a)(1) and (b)(1)(A) (Entering and Remaining in a Restricted Building or Grounds with a Deadly or Dangerous Weapon); Count Five, 18 U.S.C. § 1752(a)(2) and (b)(1)(A) (Disorderly and Disruptive Conduct in a Restricted Building or Grounds with a Deadly or Dangerous Weapon); Count Six, 18 U.S.C. § 1752(a)(4) and (b)(1)(A) (Engaging in Physical Violence in a Restricted Building or Grounds with a Deadly or Dangerous Weapon); Count Seven, 40 U.S.C. § 5104(e)(2)(D) (Disorderly Conduct in a Capitol Building) and Count Eight, 40 U.S.C. § 5104(e)(2)(F) (Act of Physical Violence in the Capitol Grounds or Buildings). ECF 6.

The defendant now moves for a change of venue. ECF No. 27. The defendant contends that prejudice should be presumed in this district for several reasons: (1) the pretrial publicity surrounding the events of January 6, (2) the characteristics of the D.C. jury pool, (3) the results of a survey of potential jurors from the District of Columbia compared to potential jurors from Atlanta, Georgia as well as nationally, and (4) the results of a media analysis. Each of the defendant's arguments is without merit, and the motion should be denied.

ARGUMENT

The Constitution provides that “[t]he trial of all Crimes . . . shall be held in the State where the said Crimes shall have been committed.” U.S. Const. Art. III, § 2, cl. 3. The Sixth Amendment similarly guarantees the right to be tried “by an impartial jury of the State and district wherein the crime shall have been committed.” U.S. Const. amend. VI. These provisions provide “a safeguard against the unfairness and hardship involved when an accused is prosecuted in a remote place.” United States v. Cores, 356 U.S. 405, 407 (1958). Transfer to another venue is constitutionally required only where “extraordinary local prejudice will prevent a fair trial.” Skilling v. United States, 561 U.S. 358, 378 (2010); see Fed. R. Crim. P. 21(a) (requiring transfer to another district if “so great a prejudice against the defendant exists in the transferring district that the defendant cannot obtain a fair and impartial trial there”).

The primary safeguard of the right to an impartial jury is “an adequate voir dire to identify unqualified jurors.” Morgan v. Illinois, 504 U.S. 719, 729 (1992) (italics omitted). Thus, the best course when faced with a pretrial publicity claim is ordinarily “to proceed to voir dire to ascertain whether the prospective jurors have, in fact, been influenced by pretrial publicity.” United States v. Campa, 459 F.3d 1121, 1146 (11th Cir. 2006) (en banc). “[I]f an impartial jury actually cannot be selected, that fact should become evident at the voir dire.” United States v. Haldeman, 559 F.2d 31, 63 (D.C. Cir. 1976) (en banc) (per curiam). And, after voir dire, “it may be found that, despite earlier prognostications, removal of the trial is unnecessary.” Jones v. Gasch, 404 F.2d 1231, 1238 (D.C. Cir. 1967).

I. The Pretrial Publicity Related to January 6 Does Not Support a Presumption of Prejudice in This District.

The defendant contends that a change of venue is warranted based on pretrial publicity. ECF No. 27 at 4-5, 20-26. “The mere existence of intense pretrial publicity is not enough to make a trial unfair, nor is the fact that potential jurors have been exposed to this publicity.” United States v. Childress, 58 F.3d 693, 706 (D.C. Cir. 1995); see Murphy v. Florida, 421 U.S. 794, 799 (1975) (juror exposure to “news accounts of the crime with which [a defendant] is charged” does not “alone presumptively deprive[] the defendant of due process”). Indeed, “every case of public interest is almost, as a matter of necessity, brought to the attention of all the intelligent people in the vicinity, and scarcely any one can be found among those best fitted for jurors who has not read or heard of it, and who has not some impression or some opinion in respect to its merits.” Reynolds v. United States, 98 U.S. 145, 155-56 (1878). Thus, the “mere existence of any preconceived notion as to the guilt or innocence of an accused, without more,” is insufficient to establish prejudice. Irvin, 366 U.S. at 723. “It is sufficient if the juror can lay aside his impression or opinion and render a verdict based on the evidence presented in court.” Id.

The Supreme Court has recognized only a narrow category of cases in which prejudice is presumed to exist without regard to prospective jurors' answers during voir dire. See Rideau v. Louisiana, 373 U.S. 723 (1963). In Rideau, the defendant's confession—obtained while he was in jail and without an attorney present—was broadcast three times shortly before trial on a local television station to audiences ranging from 24,000 to 53,000 individuals in a parish of approximately 150,000 people. Id. at 724 (majority opinion), 728-29 (Clark, J., dissenting). The Court concluded that, “to the tens of thousands of people who saw and heard it,” the televised confession “in a very real sense was Rideau's trial—at which he pleaded guilty to murder.” Rideau, 373 U.S. at 726. Thus, the Court “d[id] not hesitate to hold, without pausing to examine a particularized transcript of the voir dire,” that these “kangaroo court proceedings” violated due process. Id. at 726-27.

Since Rideau, the Supreme Court has emphasized that a “presumption of prejudice . . . attends only the extreme case,” Skilling, 561 U.S. at 381, and the Court has repeatedly “held in other cases that trials have been fair in spite of widespread publicity,” Nebraska Press Ass'n v. Stuart, 427 U.S. 539, 554 (1976). In the half century since Rideau, the Supreme Court has never presumed prejudice based on pretrial publicity. But see Estes v. Texas, 381 U.S. 532 (1965) (presuming prejudice based on media interference with courtroom proceedings); Sheppard v. Maxwell, 384 U.S. 333 (1966) (same). In fact, courts have declined to transfer venue in some of the most high-profile prosecutions in recent American history. See In re Tsarnaev, 780 F.3d 14, 15 (1st Cir. 2015) (per curiam) (capital prosecution of Boston Marathon bomber); Skilling, 561 U.S. at 399 (fraud trial of CEO of Enron Corporation); United States v. Yousef, 327 F.3d 56, 155 (2d Cir. 2003) (trial of participant in 1993 World Trade Center bombing); United States v. Moussaoui, 43 F. App'x 612, 613 (4th Cir. 2002) (per curiam) (unpublished) (terrorism prosecution for conspirator in September 11, 2001 attacks); Haldeman, 559 F.2d at 70 (Watergate prosecution of former Attorney General John Mitchell and other Nixon aides).

In Skilling, the Supreme Court considered several factors in determining that prejudice should not be presumed where former Enron executive Jeffrey Skilling was tried in Houston, where Enron was based. Skilling, 561 U.S. at 382-83. First, the Court considered the “size and characteristics of the community.” Id. at 382. Unlike Rideau, where the murder “was committed in a parish of only 150,000 residents,” Houston was home to more than 4.5 million people eligible for jury service. Id. at 382. Second, “although news stories about Skilling were not kind, they contained no confession or other blatantly prejudicial information of the type readers or viewers could not reasonably be expected to shut from sight.” Id. Third, “over four years elapsed between Enron’s bankruptcy and Skilling’s trial,” and “the decibel level of media attention diminished somewhat in the years following Enron’s collapse.” Id. at 383. “Finally, and of prime significance, Skilling’s jury acquitted him of nine insider-trading counts,” which undermined any “supposition of juror bias.” Id.

Although these Skilling factors are not exhaustive, courts have found them useful when considering claims of presumptive prejudice based on pretrial publicity. See, e.g., In re Tsarnaev, 780 F.3d at 21-22; United States v. Petters, 663 F.3d 375, 385 (8th Cir. 2011). And contrary to the defendant’s contention, those factors do not support a presumption of prejudice in this case.

A. Size and characteristics of the community

The defendant suggests [ECF No. 27 at 7-8] that an impartial jury cannot be found in Washington, D.C., despite the District’s population of nearly 700,000. Although this District may be smaller than most other federal judicial districts, it has a larger population than two states (Wyoming and Vermont), and more than four times as many people as the parish in Rideau. The relevant question is not whether the District of Columbia is as populous as the Southern District of Texas in Skilling, but whether it is large enough that an impartial jury can be found. In Mu'Min v. Virginia, 500 U.S. 415, 429 (1991), the Court cited a county population of 182,537 as supporting the view that an impartial jury could be selected. And Skilling approvingly cited a state case in which there was “a reduced likelihood of prejudice” because the “venire was drawn from a pool of over 600,000 individuals.” Skilling, 561 U.S. at 382 (quoting Gentile v. State Bar of Nev., 501 U.S. 1030, 1044 (1991)). There is simply no reason to believe that, out of an eligible jury pool of nearly half a million, “12 impartial individuals could not be empaneled.” Id.

B. Nature of the pretrial publicity

The defendant argues that prejudice should be presumed based on statements by the President, Vice President, Attorney General of the United States, and other political leaders. ECF No. 27 at 22-26. But harsh condemnation of a defendant’s actions is not uncommon in high-profile criminal cases, and it does not suffice to establish prejudice. In Skilling, the news stories about the defendant’s involvement in Enron’s collapse “were not kind,” but they “contained no confession or other blatantly prejudicial information of the type readers or viewers could not reasonably be expected to shut from sight.” Skilling, 561 U.S. at 382. And in Haldeman, although some of the coverage of the Watergate scandal was “hostile in tone and accusatory in content,” the bulk of the coverage “consist[ed] of straightforward, unemotional factual accounts of events and of the progress of official and unofficial investigations.” Haldeman, 559 F.2d at 61. The D.C. Circuit concluded that the coverage “was neither as inherently prejudicial nor as unforgettable as the spectacle of Rideau’s dramatically staged and broadcast confession.” Id. The same is true here, where news coverage has not reported on any confession or other blatantly prejudicial information about Christian Matthew Manley. And, again, statements by the President, Vice President and

Attorney General are ordinarily reported across the entire country, and exposure to these statements is hardly unique to Washington, D.C.

The defendant asserts that a fair trial cannot be had in D.C. because of the volume of news coverage of January 6. ECF No. 27 at 20-22. But even “massive” news coverage of a crime does not require prejudice to be presumed. Haldeman, 559 F.2d at 61. And a comparatively small percentage of the news coverage of January 6 has focused on Mr. Manley himself. Unlike most cases involving pretrial publicity, where the news coverage focuses on the responsibility of a single defendant (as in Rideau or Tsarnaev) or small number of co-defendants (as in Skilling and Haldeman), the events of January 6 involved thousands of participants and have so far resulted in charges against more than 800 people. The Court can guard against any spillover prejudice from the broader coverage of January 6 by conducting a careful voir dire and properly instructing the jury about the need to determine a defendant’s individual guilt.

And, in any event, any threat of such spillover prejudice is not limited to Washington, D.C. because much of the news coverage of January 6 has been national in scope. See Haldeman, 559 F.2d at 64 n.43 (observing that “a change of venue would have been of only doubtful value” where much of the news coverage was “national in [its] reach” and the crime was of national interest); United States v. Bochene, No. 21-cr-418-RDM, 2022 WL 123893, at *3 (D.D.C. Jan. 12, 2022) (“The fact that there has been ongoing media coverage of the breach of the Capitol and subsequent prosecutions, both locally and nationally, means that the influence of that coverage would be present wherever the trial is held.” (internal quotation marks omitted)). As the Select Litigation poll demonstrates, the number of potential jurors exposed to “[a] lot” of news coverage of January 6 differs only slightly between Washington, D.C. (33%) and Atlanta (30%). ECF No. 27, exhibit 1 at 14 (Question 8). Thus, the nature and extent of the pretrial publicity do not support a presumption of prejudice.

C. Passage of time before trial

In Skilling, the Court considered the fact that “over four years elapsed between Enron’s bankruptcy and Skilling’s trial.” Skilling, 561 U.S. at 383. In this case, nearly 18 months have already elapsed since the events of January 6, and more time will elapse before trial. This is far more than in Rideau, where the defendant’s trial came two months after his televised confession. Rideau, 373 U.S. at 724. Mr. Manley points out that the actions of the U.S. House of Representatives Select Committee to Investigate the January 6th Attack on the United States Capitol continue to feature prominently in the news. But the Select Committee’s investigation has focused on the actions of political leaders, and not on Mr. Manley, who has received relatively little news coverage. And the coverage of the Select Committee hearings—like the coverage of January 6 in general—has been national in scope, rather than limited to D.C. See ECF No. 27 at 27 (citing coverage by “Washington Post, New York Times, CNN, Vanity Fair, Rolling Stone, and NPR”). Particularly once the Select Committee hearings conclude, there is no reason to believe that the ongoing coverage relating to January 6 will prevent the selection of a fair jury in this District.

D. The jury verdict

Because Mr. Manley has not yet gone to trial, the final Skilling factor—whether the “jury’s verdict . . . undermine[s] in any way the supposition of juror bias,” Skilling, 561 U.S. at 383—does not directly apply. But the fact that Skilling considered this factor to be “of prime significance,” id., underscores how unusual it is to presume prejudice before trial. Ordinarily, a case should proceed to trial in the district where the crime was committed, and courts can examine after trial whether the record supports a finding of actual or presumed prejudice. In short, none of the Skilling factors supports the defendant's contention that the Court should presume prejudice and order a transfer of venue without even conducting voir dire.

II. The Characteristics of the District of Columbia's Jury Pool Do Not Support a Change of Venue.

The defendant also contends that a D.C. jury cannot be impartial because of various characteristics of the District's jury pool: the political makeup of the District's electorate, the impact of January 6 on D.C. residents, and the prevalence of federal employees in the District. ECF No. 27 at 7–16. None of these claims has merit.

A. The District of Columbia's political makeup does not support a change of venue.

The defendant contends that he cannot obtain a fair trial in the District of Columbia because in the 2016 Presidential Election 95.9% of D.C. voters voted against Trump, in the 2020 Presidential Election 94.6% of D.C. voters voted against Trump and more than 90% of its voters voted for the Democratic Party candidate. ECF No. 27 at 13. The en banc D.C. Circuit rejected a nearly identical claim in Haldeman, where the dissent concluded that a venue change was required because “Washington, D.C. is unique in its overwhelming concentration of supporters of the Democratic Party” and the Democratic candidate received 81.8% and 78.1% of the vote when Nixon ran for President in 1968 and 1972, respectively. Haldeman, 559 F.2d at 160 (MacKinnon, J., concurring in part and dissenting in part). The majority rejected the relevance of this fact, observing that authority cited by the dissent gave no “intimation that a community's voting patterns are at all pertinent to venue.” Id. at 64 n.43; see also United States v. Chapin, 515 F.2d 1274, 1286 (D.C. Cir. 1975) (rejecting the argument that “because of [the defendant's] connection with the Nixon administration and his participation in a ‘dirty tricks’ campaign aimed at Democratic candidates and with racial overtones, a truly fair and impartial jury could not have been drawn from the District's heavily black, and overwhelmingly Democratic, population").

If "the District of Columbia's voting record in the past two presidential elections" is not "at all pertinent to venue" in a case involving high-ranking members of a presidential administration, Haldeman, 559 F.2d at 64 n.43, it cannot justify a change of venue here. To be sure, some potential jurors might be unable to be impartial in January 6 cases based on disagreement with the defendants' political aims. But whether individual prospective jurors have such disqualifying biases can be assessed during voir dire. This Court should not presume that every member of a particular political party is biased simply because this case has a political connection. Indeed, the Supreme Court has stated in the context of an election-fraud trial, that "[t]he law assumes that every citizen is equally interested in the enforcement of the statute enacted to guard the integrity of national elections, and that his political opinions or affiliations will not stand in the way of an honest discharge of his duty as a juror in cases arising under that statute." Connors v. United States, 158 U.S. 408, 414 (1895). The same is true here. The District's voting record does not establish that this Court will be unable to select "an unbiased jury capable of basing its verdict solely on the evidence introduced at trial." Haldeman, 559 F.2d at 70.

To the contrary, as the nation's capital and seat of the federal government, the District has been home to its fair share of trials in politically charged cases. High-profile individuals strongly associated with a particular party, such as Marion Barry, John Poindexter, Oliver North, Scooter Libby, Roger Stone, and Steve Bannon have all been tried in the District. See United States v. Barry, 938 F.2d 1327 (D.C. Cir. 1991); United States v. Poindexter, 951 F.2d 369 (D.C. Cir. 1991); United States v. North, 910 F.2d 843 (D.C. Cir. 1990) (per curiam); United States v. Libby, 498 F. Supp. 2d 1 (D.D.C. 2007); United States v. Stone, No. 19-cr-0018 (ABJ), 2020 WL 1892360 (D.D.C. Apr. 16, 2020), United States v. Bannon, No. 210-cr-670 (CJN). Indeed, the Court in Stone rejected the argument that jurors “could not possibly view [Roger Stone] independently from the President” because of his role in the presidential campaign or that “if you do not like Donald Trump, you must not like Roger Stone.” 2020 WL 1892360, at *30-31. Similarly here, the fact that most District residents voted against Donald Trump does not mean those residents could not impartially consider the evidence against those charged in connection with the events on January 6.

B. The impact of January 6 on Washington D.C. does not support a change of venue.

The defendant contends that a D.C. jury could not be impartial because D.C. residents have been particularly affected by events surrounding January 6, including the militarization of Washington, D.C., deployment of the National Guard, the mayor’s declaration of a state of emergency, road closures, and a curfew. ECF No. 27 at 8. But January 6 is now more than a year in the past. Many D.C. residents do not live or work near the Capitol where the roads were closed and the National Guard was deployed. There is no reason to believe that the District’s entire population of nearly 700,000 people was so affected by these events that the Court cannot seat an impartial jury here.

Indeed, courts routinely conclude that defendants can receive a fair trial in the location where they committed their crimes, despite the fact that some members of the community were victimized. See In re Tsarnaev, 780 F.3d 14, 15 (1st Cir. 2015) (Boston Marathon bombing); Skilling, 561 U.S. at 399 (Enron collapse); United States v. Yousef, 327 F.3d 56, 155 (2d Cir. 2003) (1993 World Trade Center bombing); United States v. Moussaoui, 43 F. App’x 612, 613 (4th Cir. 2002) (per curiam) (unpublished) (September 11, 2001 attacks, including on the Pentagon). In Skilling, the Supreme Court rejected the contention that Enron’s “sheer number of victims” in the Houston area “trigger[ed] a presumption of prejudice.” Skilling, 561 U.S. at 384 (quotation omitted). “Although the widespread community impact necessitated careful identification and inspection of prospective jurors’ connections to Enron,” the voir dire was “well suited to that task.” Id. In this case too, voir dire can adequately identify those D.C. residents who were so affected by January 6 that they cannot impartially serve as jurors. There is no reason to presume prejudice.

C. The number of federal employees who reside in the District of Columbia does not support a change of venue.

The defendant argues that the Court should presume prejudice in this District because the jury pool would contain a high percentage of federal government employees or their friends and family members. ECF No. 27 at 9. But the defendant does not explain how merely being employed by the federal government would render a person incapable of serving as an impartial juror. Although some federal employees, such as the U.S. Capitol Police, were affected by the events of January 6, many others were neither directly nor indirectly affected. Indeed, many federal employees were nowhere near the Capitol on January 6 given the maximum telework posture at the time. And the storming of the Capitol on January 6 was not aimed at the federal government in general, but specifically at Congress’ certification of the electoral vote. There is therefore no reason to believe that federal employees with little or no connection to the events at the Capitol could not be impartial in this case. See United States v. Bochene, No. CR 21-418 (RDM), 2022 WL 123893, at *2 (D.D.C. Jan. 12, 2022) (January 6 defendant’s claim that federal employees would “have a vested interest in supporting their employer” was “exactly the kind of conjecture that is insufficient to warrant transfer prior to jury selection”).

Even assuming (incorrectly) that every federal employee is affected by improper bias, the Court could draw a jury from those District residents who are not employed by the federal government. According to the Office of Personnel Management, around 141,000 non-Postal Service employees worked in Washington, D.C., in 2017. OPM, Federal Civilian Employment, available at <https://www.opm.gov/policy-data-oversight/data-analysis-documentation/federal-employment-reports/reports-publications/federal-civilian-employment/>. But many federal employees who work in the District live outside the District and would not be part of the jury pool. And the District has nearly 700,000 residents. Thus, even if every federal employee were disqualified, the Court would be able to pick a jury in this District.

III. The Poll Submitted by the Defendant Does Not Support a Change of Venue.

The defendant relies on a poll conducted by Select Litigation, a private litigation consulting firm, at the request of the Federal Public Defender for the District of Columbia. ECF No. 27 at 17-21. Select Litigation conducted a telephone poll of potential jurors in the District of Columbia and in the Atlanta Division of the Northern District of Georgia and contracted with a media research firm to analyze news media coverage of January 6 in both of those jurisdictions. That poll does not support the defendant's request for a venue transfer.

A. Courts have repeatedly declined to find a presumption of prejudice based on pretrial polling without conducting voir dire.

The defendant argues that this Court should find a presumption of prejudice based on a poll of prospective jurors. But “courts have commonly rejected such polls as unpersuasive in favor of effective voir dire as a preferable way to ferret out any bias.” United States v. Causey, 2005 WL 8160703, at *7 (S.D. Tex. 2005). As one circuit has observed, the Supreme Court's emphasis on the important role of voir dire in addressing pretrial publicity “undercuts” the “argument that poll percentages . . . decide the question of a presumption of prejudice.” In re Tsarnaev, 780 F.3d 14, 23 (1st Cir. 2015) (per curiam); see Mu'Min v. Virginia, 500 U.S. 415, 427 (1991) (observing that, “[p]articularly with respect to pretrial publicity, . . . primary reliance on the judgment of the trial court makes good sense”).

Indeed, the D.C. Circuit has rejected a claim of presumed prejudice based on the results of a pre-voir dire survey. Haldeman, 559 F.2d at 64. In Haldeman, seven former Nixon administration officials (including the former Attorney General of the United States) were prosecuted for their role in the Watergate scandal. Id. at 51. According to a poll commissioned by the defense in that case, 93% of the Washington, D.C. population knew of the charges against the defendants and 61% had formed the opinion that they were guilty. Id. at 144, 178 n.2 (MacKinnon, J., concurring in part and dissenting in part). Recognizing that the case had produced a “massive” amount of pretrial publicity, id. at 61, the D.C. Circuit nevertheless held that the district court “was correct” to deny the defendants’ “pre-voir dire requests for . . . a change of venue,” id. at 63-64. The court observed that the district court “did not err in relying less heavily on a poll taken in private by private pollsters and paid for by one side than on a recorded, comprehensive voir dire examination conducted by the judge in the presence of all parties and their counsel.” Id. at 64 n.43; see Jones, 404 F.2d at 1238 (observing that it is “upon the voir dire examination,” and “usually only then, that a fully adequate appraisal of the claim [of local community prejudice] can be made” (quotation omitted)).

Other circuits have similarly rejected attempts to elevate polling results over voir dire. In United States v. Campa, a pre-trial survey found that 69% of respondents were prejudiced against anyone charged with spying on behalf of Cuba, as the defendants were. Campa, 459 F.3d at 1157 (Birch, J., dissenting). The en banc Eleventh Circuit affirmed the denial of a motion for change of venue, explaining that “[w]hen a defendant alleges that prejudicial pretrial publicity would prevent him from receiving a fair trial, it is within the district court’s broad discretion to proceed to voir dire to ascertain whether the prospective jurors have, in fact, been influenced by pretrial publicity.” Id. at 1146 (majority opinion).

Similarly, in United States v. Rodriguez, 581 F.3d 775 (8th Cir. 2009), a poll indicated that 99 percent of respondents had heard about the brutal rape and murder with which the defendant was charged, nearly 88 percent of those respondents believed he was guilty, and about 42 percent of respondents had a strongly held opinion of his guilt. Id. at 786; Brief for the Appellant, United States v. Rodriguez, No. 07-1316 (8th Cir.), 2008 WL 194877, at *19. Nonetheless, the Eighth Circuit found no presumption of prejudice, observing that a district court was not required “to consider public opinion polls when ruling on change-of-venue motions.” Rodriguez, 581 F.3d at 786. And the court held that, in any event, the poll did not “demonstrate widespread community prejudice” because the “media coverage had not been inflammatory,” two years had passed since the murder, and “the district court concluded that special voir dire protocols would screen out prejudiced jurors.” Id.

There are good reasons to rely on voir dire, rather than public-opinion polls, when assessing whether prejudice should be presumed. First, polling lacks many of the safeguards of court-supervised voir dire, including the involvement of both parties in formulating the questions. Surveys that are not carefully worded and properly conducted can produce misleading results, such as by asking leading questions or providing the respondents with facts that will influence their responses. See Campa, 459 F.3d at 1146 (noting problems with “non-neutral” and “ambiguous” questions). Second, polling lacks the formality that attends in-court proceedings under oath, and it does not afford the court the “face-to-face opportunity to gauge demeanor and credibility.” Skilling, 561 U.S. at 395. Third, polls ordinarily inform the court only the extent to which prospective jurors have heard about a case and formed an opinion about it. But that is not the ultimate question when picking a jury. A prospective juror is not disqualified simply because he has “formed some impression or opinion as to the merits of the case.” Irvin v. Dowd, 366 U.S. 717, 722 (1961). Instead, “[i]t is sufficient if the juror can lay aside his impression or opinion and render a verdict based on the evidence presented in court.” Id. at 723. But pre-trial surveys are poorly suited to answering that ultimate question, which is best asked in the context of face-to-face voir dire under oath. See Rosales-Lopez v. United States, 451 U.S. 182, 188 (1981) (observing that the trial judge’s function in voir dire “is not unlike that of the jurors later in the trial” because “[b]oth must reach conclusions as to impartiality and credibility by relying on their own evaluations of demeanor evidence and of responses to questions”).

In sum, federal courts have shown an overwhelming preference for assessing prejudice through court-supervised voir dire rather than through public opinion polls. And the defendant has not offered any reason to depart from that usual practice here. Thus, this Court need not give substantial weight to the polling when considering whether to presume prejudice. But, as explained below, the poll submitted by the defendant does not support a presumption of prejudice in any event.

B. The Select Litigation poll does not demonstrate pervasive prejudice in the District of Columbia.

Contrary to the defendant’s contention, the Select Litigation poll does not support a presumption of prejudice in this District. As an initial matter, the Select Litigation poll selected only one comparator jurisdiction—the Atlanta Division of the Northern District of Georgia. The defendant has not requested a transfer to that district or division, but instead asks this Court for a transfer to another unspecified venue.

In any event, the poll indicates that levels of media exposure to the events of January 6 are not significantly different in Atlanta than in Washington, D.C. The number of respondents who had seen “[a] lot” of coverage in each jurisdiction differed only by three percentage points (33% in D.C. versus 30% in Atlanta), which is within the margin of error. ECF No. 27, exhibit 1, at 1 - 2, 15. The number of respondents who had seen “[s]ome” coverage was exactly the same (25% in both jurisdictions), and the number who had seen “[q]uite a bit” of coverage was not significantly different (28% in D.C. versus 20% in Atlanta). Id. at 14. The total percentage of respondents who were exposed to “[a] lot,” “[q]uite a bit,” or “[s]ome” news coverage was 86% in Washington, D.C. and 75% in Atlanta. Id. at 14. This relatively small difference does not suggest that news coverage has made it impossible to pick an impartial jury in Washington, D.C.

The defendant points out [ECF No. 27 at 17] that 71% of respondents in D.C. said they had formed the opinion January 6 arrestees were “guilty” of the charges brought against them. See ECF No. 27, exhibit 1 at 15. The survey failed, however, to identify (much less define) any of the charges brought against the defendant. It also failed to provide respondents with the option of saying they were “unsure” about guilt, even though such an option is required by professional standards that apply in this area. See American Society of Trial Consultants, Professional Standards for Venue Surveys at 9, available at <https://www.astcweb.org/Resources/Pictures/Venue%2010-08.pdf> (“Respondents must be made aware that they can say they do not know or have no opinion.”). The survey instead gave respondents a binary choice between “guilty or not guilty.” ECF No. 27, exhibit 1 at 15. Yet even without being provided the appropriate options, 26% of D.C. respondents voluntarily gave an answer of “Depends” or “Don’t know/Refused.” Id. This shows that, even in response to a poorly worded question, more than a quarter of the District’s residents realized the need to keep an open mind about guilt.

Understood in context, the Select Litigation poll does not indicate any higher degree of juror bias than in Haldeman, where the en banc D.C. Circuit found no presumption of prejudice. In Haldeman, 61% of respondents expressed a view that the defendants were guilty, as opposed to the 71% here. See Haldeman, 559 F.2d at 144, 178 n.2 (MacKinnon, J., concurring in part and dissenting in part). But the survey in Haldeman first asked respondents whether they had formed an opinion about whether the indicted Nixon aides were guilty or innocent, giving options for both “No” (i.e. had not formed an opinion) and “Don’t Know/No Opinion.” Id. at 178 n.2. The survey then asked whether respondents thought the defendants were “guilty or innocent in the Watergate affair,” giving options for “Not Guilty Until Proven” and “No Opinion/Don’t Know.” Id. Only after (a) being prompted to consider whether they could actually form an opinion, and (b) being reminded of the presumption of innocence, did 61% of respondents say “guilty.” Id. Here, by contrast, respondents were not provided a “don’t know” option, were not reminded of the presumption of innocence, and were asked only whether they thought the “several hundred people” arrested in connection with January 6 were “guilty.” ECF No. 27, exhibit 1 at 15 (Questions 3, 4).

When asked about guilt in the context of a criminal trial, however, respondents in the Select Litigation survey were far less likely to give an answer of “guilty.” Question 5 asked them to “[a]ssume [they] were on a jury for a defendant charged with crimes for his or her activities on January 6” and then asked whether they were “more likely to vote that the person is guilty or not guilty.” ECF No. 27, exhibit 1 at 15. In response to this question, only 52% of D.C. respondents said “Guilty,” and fully 46% volunteered a response of “Depends” or “Don’t know/Refused.” Id. Thus, when asked to consider guilt or innocence in the context of a “defendant charged with crimes,” as opposed to the “several hundred people . . . arrested,” nearly half of D.C. residents were committed to keeping an open mind—even without being instructed on the presumption of innocence or being provided an option for “Do not know.” This indicates, if anything, a lower degree of prejudice than was present in Haldeman.

The defendant points out ECF No. 27 at 17. that, according to the Select Litigation poll, 84% of D.C. respondents had an “unfavorable” view of “people arrested for participating in the events at the U.S. Capitol on January 6.” ECF No. 27, exhibit 1 at 15. Although that is higher than the 54% of Atlantans with unfavorable views, it is quite similar to the results of a nationwide CBS poll, which found that 83% of respondents “[s]omewhat disapprove” or “[s]trongly disapprove” of the “actions taken by the people who forced their way into the U.S. Capitol on January 6.” See CBS News Poll, December 27-30, 2021, Question 2, https://drive.google.com/file/d/1QNzK7xBJeWzKlTrHVobLgyFtId9Cgsq_/view. The defendant has not asked to be tried in Atlanta. And, in any event, the fact that many D.C. residents have a generally “unfavorable” view of people “arrested” on January 6 does not mean that an impartial jury cannot be selected in this jurisdiction.

The defendant also points out [ECF No. 27 at 17] that 62% of D.C. respondents (compared to 48% of Atlanta respondents) would describe “most of the people who were arrested for their involvement in the events on January 6th” as “criminals.” ECF No. 27, exhibit 1 at 15 (Question 10). The answers to this question likely reflect the commonly held view that most people arrested for crimes are in fact guilty of those crimes. But the fact that 62% of D.C. respondents expressed this off-the-cuff view about “most” of the 700-plus January 6th arrestees does not demonstrate that all of those respondents would be unable to impartially find the facts in a specific case after being properly instructed by the Court. Moreover, the question demonstrates that fully 28% of D.C. respondents would not describe those arrestees as criminals, and 9% were unsure or refused to answer. ECF No. 27, exhibit 1 at 15. And the 14% difference between D.C. and Atlanta—which could easily be explained by demographic differences such as age and education levels (see ECF No. 27, exhibit 1 at 16)—would not justify the conclusion that this is an “extreme case” in which a change of venue is required. Skilling, 561 U.S. at 381.

Nor should prejudice be presumed because a substantial numbers of respondents “would” describe “the people who forced their way into the U.S. Capitol” as “[t]rying to overturn the election and keep Donald Trump in power” (85%), engaging in “[i]nsurrection” (76%), or “[t]rying to overthrow the U.S. government” (72%). ECF No. 27, exhibit 1 at 16. For one thing, this question asked specifically about those who “forced their way into the U.S. Capitol,” which suggests a higher degree of culpability than simply entering the Capitol. For another, the poll did not provide an “undecided” option but asked only whether respondents “would” or “would not” use those descriptions. Id. Nor did the question define the offenses of “insurrection” or advocating the overthrow of government, see 18 U.S.C. §§ 2383, 2385, offenses with which no defendant has been charged in connection with January 6. And, most importantly, the poll did not answer the key question: whether a sufficient number of prospective jurors can “lay aside [their] impression[s] or opinion[s] and render a verdict based on the evidence presented in court.” Irvin v. Dowd, 366 U.S. 717, 723 (1961); see Patton v. Yount, 467 U.S. 1025, 1029 (1984) (no presumption of prejudice where nearly 99% of prospective jurors had heard of the case and 77% indicated on voir dire that “they would carry an opinion into the jury box”). In short, the Select Litigation poll does not come close to demonstrating that “12 impartial individuals could not be empaneled” in Washington, D.C. Skilling, 561 U.S. at 382.

In any U.S. jurisdiction, most prospective jurors will have heard about the events of January 6, and many will have various disqualifying biases. But the appropriate way to identify and address those biases is through a careful voir dire, rather than a change of venue based solely on pretrial polling and media analyses. As in Haldeman, there is “no reason for concluding that the population of Washington, D. C. [i]s so aroused against [the defendant] and so unlikely to be able objectively to judge [his] guilt or innocence on the basis of the evidence presented at trial” that a change of venue is required. Haldeman, 559 F.2d at 62.

IV. The Select Litigation Media Analysis Does Not Support a Change of Venue.

The defendant also incorrectly contends that the media analysis conducted by Select Litigation supports a change of venue. ECF No. 27 at 22-23. The analysis shows that, in nine of the 13 months analyzed, the Washington Post ran more news stories about January 6 than did the Atlanta Journal-Constitution. ECF No. 27, exhibit 1 at 10. Again, as with the Selection Litigation poll, this analysis does not focus on the defendant's preferred venue as the defendant simply request another venue and therefore provides little insight into the media exposure of prospective jurors in that district.

Moreover, for several reasons, these numbers do not demonstrate that media exposure was significantly different in Atlanta than in Washington, D.C. First, the comparison fails to account for the comparative sizes and circulations of the two newspapers. It should not be surprising that a large national newspaper would print more articles on the same topic than a regional newspaper. Second, the analysis does not account for the fact that many Americans receive their news from national sources such as CNN or Fox News, often filtered through social media. Thus, prospective jurors in both Washington, D.C. and Atlanta are not limited to their local newspapers and television broadcast stations and may well have been exposed to much of the same media coverage. Third, simply counting the number of news articles in a given source is not a good way to measure prospective jurors' media exposure. Indeed, the Select Litigation poll shows comparatively small variations in media exposure between Washington, D.C. and Atlanta. According to that poll, 99% of D.C. respondents were aware of the January 6 demonstrations, compared to 93% in Atlanta, and 33% of D.C. respondents had seen "A lot" of coverage, compared to 30% in Atlanta. ECF No. 27, exhibit 1 at 14-15. Like the Watergate scandal at issue in Haldeman, the storming of the Capitol on January 6, 2021, was "not a local crime of peculiar interest to the residents of the District of Columbia” but one that generated national interest. Haldeman, 559 F.2d at 64 n.43.

The Select Litigation analysis also concludes that “the number of hits from internet sites based in the District of Columbia area was four times higher than the comparable number of hits from sites based in the Atlanta area.” ECF No. 27, exhibit 1 at 10. But the analysis includes no information about where these hits came from. Many of the hits on D.C.-based news sources likely came from readers outside the District itself, such as readers in the Northern Virginia and Maryland suburbs or readers from other parts of the country who were directed to D.C.-based news reporting on social media. A reader in California, for example, would be far more likely to read about January 6 on the Washington Post than on the Atlanta Journal-Constitution. Without additional information, this analysis of Internet hits is essentially meaningless.

The Select Litigation analysis is also unhelpful because it considered only the coverage of January 6 in general, as opposed to the coverage of Christian Manley. Mr. Manley is one of more than 800 defendants charged in connection with January 6, and only a fraction of the media coverage has focused on him. Indeed, the coverage of Mr. Manley is less significant than in Skilling, where the Houston Chronicle “mentioned Enron in more than 4,000 articles during the 3-year period following the company’s December 2001 bankruptcy” with “[h]undreds of these articles discussing Skilling by name.” Skilling, 561 U.S. at 428 (Sotomayor, J., concurring in part and dissenting in part).

Finally, the media analysis fails to support a presumption of prejudice because mere exposure to pretrial publicity does not disqualify a potential juror. “Prominence does not necessarily produce prejudice, and juror impartiality . . . does not require ignorance.” Skilling, 561 U.S. at 381. The Supreme Court has found no presumption of prejudice even when 98% of prospective jurors had heard of the case and 77% indicated on voir dire that “they would carry an opinion into the jury box.” Patton, 467 U.S. at 1029. The mere fact that Washington, D.C. news outlets have run more stories about January 6 (and received more hits) than have Atlanta outlets does not suggest that an impartial jury cannot be selected in Washington D.C.

V. The Publicity Caused by Other January 6 Trials in this District Do Not Support a Change of Venue.

The defendant argues that he is likely to be prejudiced by the publicity generated by other recent trials involving charges based on the events of January 6. ECF No. 27 at 28. Although the trials in those cases have generated media coverage, that coverage was not confined to the District of Columbia and was focused on the defendants in those cases, without mentioning Mr. Manley. The defendant cannot show that jurors in this District, carefully selected after a thorough voir dire and properly instructed in the law, would be more likely to convict him simply because they were exposed to media coverage of other January 6 trials. Nor can the defendant show that any such asserted prejudice would be meaningfully different in another jurisdiction, given the national coverage of these trials. Additionally, by the time the defendant has gone to trial, even more time will have passed since the siege at the Capitol on January 6, 2021, and since these initial January 6 trials. And as more January 6 defendants go to trial, the level of media attention given to each particular trial is likely to diminish.

VI. Voir Dire Is the Appropriate Means of Selecting an Impartial Jury.

The defendant contends that voir dire is ineffective at addressing pretrial publicity. ECF No. 27 at 28-30. The defendant cites a 30-year-old study, conducted with mock juries, which concluded that “[t]he net effect of careful voir dire concerning pretrial publicity . . . was nil” and that “the bias created by the publicity survived voir dire unscathed.” Kerr, N L, et al., On the Effectiveness of Voir dire in Criminal Cases With Prejudicial Pretrial Publicity: An Empirical Study, 40 Am. Univ. L. Rev. 665, 697 (1991). The study also found that the prejudicial effect of “emotional publicity” (as opposed to factual publicity) “was not attenuated at all” where there was a short delay between the exposure to publicity and the trial. Id. at 675; see id. at 672.

This study does not support the defendant’s claim that a careful voir dire cannot ensure an impartial jury in this case. The Supreme Court and the D.C. Circuit have long made clear that a careful voir dire is the appropriate way to address prejudicial pretrial publicity, except in those extreme cases where prejudice is presumed. See Skilling, 561 U.S. at 381-82. The Supreme Court observed in Skilling that voir dire was “well suited to th[e] task” of probing the crime’s “widespread community impact.” Id. at 384. And the Court has said that “[i]t is fair to assume that the method we have relied on since the beginning”—i.e. voir dire—“usually identifies bias.” Patton v. Yount, 467 U.S. 1025, 1038 (1984) (citing United States v. Burr, 25 F. Cas. 49, 51 (C.C.D. Va. 1807) (Marshall, C.J.)). Similarly, the D.C. Circuit has said that “voir dire has long been recognized as an effective method of routing out [publicity-based] bias, especially when conducted in a careful and thoroughgoing manner.” In re Nat’l Broadcasting Co., 653 F.2d 609, 617 (D.C. Cir. 1981); see Haldeman, 559 F.2d at 63 (“[I]f an impartial jury actually cannot be selected, that fact should become evident at the voir dire.”).

The study that the defendant cites cannot overcome this clear precedent. Only one federal case has cited that study in its 30-year lifespan, and it did so when denying a motion for change of venue. United States v. Houlihan, 926 F. Supp. 14, 17, n.4 (D. Mass. 1996). And the study itself acknowledged that it was “certainly possible that, under other experimental or field conditions, voir dire would have been more effective in eliminating publicity-induced bias.” Id. at 699. The study does not support the defendant’s claim that voir dire is ineffective to protect the right to an impartial trial.

Nor does the study support the defendant’s claim that the effects of “emotional publicity” cannot be cured through the passage of time or continuances. ECF No. 27 at 29. If the defendant were correct, then a defendant could never be tried where, as here, exposure to “emotional publicity” is both pervasive and nationwide. But the study does not support this extreme view. The study purported to measure the effect of “a continuance” on prejudice arising from emotional publicity. Kerr, et al., 40 Am. Univ. L. Rev. at 672. But to do so, it exposed mock jurors to prejudicial publicity “several days (on average, 12 days) before the trial began.” Id. This 12-day period is far too short to conclude that continuances are not effective. And, in any event, the Supreme Court has clearly indicated that the passage of time can reduce the prejudicial effect of pretrial publicity. See Skilling, 561 U.S. at 383 (“[U]nlike cases in which trial swiftly followed a reported crime, over four years elapsed between Enron’s bankruptcy and Skilling’s trial.”); Patton, 467 U.S. at 1034 (“That time soothes and erases is a perfectly natural phenomenon, familiar to all.”). The study does not support a conclusion that prejudice arising from exposure to “emotional publicity” cannot dissipate with time.

VII. The January 6-Related Jury Trials That Have Already Occurred Have Demonstrated the Availability of a Significant Number of Fair, Impartial Jurors in the D.C. Venire.

At this point, multiple January 6 cases have proceeded to jury trials, and the Court in each of those cases has been able to select a jury without undue expenditure of time or effort. See Murphy, 421 U.S. at 802-03 (“The length to which the trial court must go to select jurors who appear to be impartial is another factor relevant in evaluating those jurors’ assurances of impartiality.”); Haldeman, 559 F.2d at 63 (observing that “if an impartial jury actually cannot be selected, that fact should become evident at the voir dire”). Instead, the judges presiding over those trials were able to select a jury in one or two days. See United States v. Reffitt, 21-cr-32, Minute Entries (Feb. 28 and Mar. 1, 2022); United States v. Robertson, 21-cr-34, Minute Entry (Apr. 5, 2022); United States v. Thompson, 21-cr-161, Minute Entry (Apr. 11, 2022); United States

v. Webster, No. 21-cr-208, Minute Entry (Apr. 25, 2022); United States v. Hale-Cusanelli, 21-cr-37, Minute Entry (May 23, 2022); United States v. Williams, 21-cr-377, Minute Entry (June 27, 2022); United States v. Bledsoe, No. 21-cr-204, Minute Entry (July 18, 2022). And, using the first five jury trials as exemplars, the voir dire that took place undermines the defendant's claim that prejudice should be presumed.²

In Reffitt, the Court individually examined 56 prospective jurors and qualified 38 of them (about 68% of those examined). See Reffitt Trial Tr. 521. The Court asked all the prospective jurors whether they had "an opinion about Mr. Reffitt's guilt or innocence in this case" and whether they had any "strong feelings or opinions" about the events of January 6 or any political beliefs that it would make it difficult to be a "fair and impartial" juror. Reffitt Trial Tr. 23, 30. The Court then followed up during individual voir dire. Of the 18 jurors that were struck for cause, only nine (or 16% of the 56 people examined) indicated that they had such strong feelings about the events of January 6 that they could not serve as fair or impartial jurors.³

In Thompson, the Court individually examined 34 prospective jurors, and qualified 25 of them (or 73%). See Thompson 4-11-22 Tr. 169, 171, 180, 189, 192. The court asked the entire venire 47 standard questions, and then followed up on their affirmative answers during individual voir dire. Id. at 3-4, 34. Of the nine prospective jurors struck for cause, only three (or about 9%

² Because they remain restricted on PACER, the transcripts from the voir dire proceedings in these cases are being submitted under separate cover to the Court and counsel.

of those examined) were stricken based on an inability to be impartial, as opposed to some other cause.⁴

Similarly, in Robertson, the Court individually examined 49 prospective jurors and qualified 34 of them (or about 69% of those examined). See Robertson Trial Tr. 302. The Court asked all prospective jurors whether they had “such strong feelings” about the events of January 6 that it would be “difficult” to follow the court’s instructions “and render a fair and impartial verdict.” Id. at 14. It asked whether anything about the allegations in that case would prevent prospective jurors from “being neutral and fair” and whether their political views would affect their ability to be “fair and impartial.” Id. at 13, 15. The Court followed up on affirmative answers to those questions during individual voir dire. Of the 15 prospective jurors struck for cause, only nine (or 18% of the 49 people examined) indicated that they had such strong feelings about the January 6 events that they could not be fair or impartial.⁵

In Webster, the Court individually examined 53 jurors and qualified 35 of them (or 66%). Webster 4-26-22 AM Tr. 6, though it later excused one of those 35 based on hardship, Webster 4-25-22 PM Tr. 217-18. The Court asked all prospective jurors whether they had “strong feelings” about the events of January 6 or about the former President that would “make it difficult for [the prospective juror] to serve as a fair and impartial juror in this case.” Webster 4-25-22 AM Tr. 19. During individual voir dire, the Court followed up on affirmative answers to clarify whether prospective jurors could set aside their feelings and decide the case fairly. See, e.g., id. at 32-33, 41-42, 54-56, 63, 65-66. Only 10 out of 53 prospective jurors (or about 19%) were stricken based on a professed or imputed inability to be impartial, as opposed to some other reason.⁶ The Webster Court observed that this number “was actually relatively low” and therefore “doesn’t bear out the concerns that were at root in the venue transfer motion” in that case. Webster, 4-26-22 AM Tr. 7.

⁵ For those struck based on a professed inability to be impartial, see Robertson Trial Tr. 26-34 (Juror 1431), 97-100 (Juror 1567), 121-30 (Juror 936), 136-42 (Juror 799), 160-71 (Juror 696), 189-93 (Juror 429), 256-65 (Juror 1010), 265-68 (Juror 585), 287-92 (Juror 1160). For those struck for other reasons, see Robertson Trial Tr. 23-26 (Juror 1566, hardship related to care for elderly sisters), 83-84 (Juror 1027, moved out of D.C.), 156-60 (Juror 1122, language concerns), 193-96 (Juror 505, work hardship), 245-50 (Juror 474, work trip); 279-82 (Juror 846, preplanned trip).

In Hale-Cusanelli, the Court individually examined 47 prospective jurors and qualified 32 of them (or 68%). Hale-Cusanelli Trial Tr. 226, 231. The Court asked prospective jurors questions similar to those asked in the other trials. See id. at 72-74 (Questions 16, 20). Of the 15 prospective jurors struck for cause, 11 (or 23% of those examined) were stricken based on a connection to the events of January 6 or a professed inability to be impartial.⁷

In these first five jury trials, the percentage of prospective jurors stricken for cause based on partiality is far lower than in Irvin, where the Supreme Court said that “statement[s] of impartiality” by some prospective jurors could be given “little weight” based on the number of other prospective jurors who “admitted prejudice.” Irvin, 366 U.S. at 728. In Irvin, 268 of 430 prospective jurors (or 62%) were stricken for cause based on “fixed opinions as to the guilt of petitioner.” Id. at 727. The percentage of partiality-based strikes in these first five January 6-related jury trials—between 9% and 23% of those examined—is far lower than the 62% in Irvin. The percentage in these cases is lower even than in Murphy, where 20 of 78 prospective jurors (25%) were “excused because they indicated an opinion as to petitioner’s guilt.” Murphy, 421 U.S. at 803. Murphy said that this percentage “by no means suggests a community with sentiment so poisoned against petitioner as to impeach the indifference of jurors who displayed no animus of their own.” Id. As in Murphy, the number of prospective jurors indicating bias does not call into question the qualifications of others whose statements of impartiality the Court has credited.

Far from showing that “an impartial jury actually cannot be selected,” Haldeman, 559 F.2d at 63, the first five January 6-related jury trials have confirmed that voir dire can adequately screen out prospective jurors who cannot be fair and impartial, while leaving more than sufficient qualified jurors to hear the case. The Court should deny the defendant’s request for a venue transfer and should instead rely on a thorough voir dire to protect the defendant’s right to an impartial jury.

VIII. A Jury Questionnaire Is Not Necessary in This Case.

The defendant also contends that this Court should use a jury questionnaire in selecting a jury. ECF No. 27 at 31. The defendant is incorrect. Although this Court has discretion to use a written questionnaire, it need not do so because it can select an impartial jury using only in-person voir dire.⁸ Issues of pre-trial publicity and potential prejudice are more meaningfully explored by in-person examination than by use of a jury questionnaire. “[W]ritten answers [do] not give counsel or the court any exposure to the demeanor of the juror in answering the . . . questions.” Mu’Min, 500 U.S. at 425. A prospective juror’s tone of voice and demeanor are important. See Rosales-Lopez, 451 U.S. at 188 (observing that the court “must reach conclusions” based on its “own evaluation[] of demeanor evidence and of response to questions”). Indeed, “[h]ow a person says something can be as telling as what a person says.” United States v. Jackson, 863 F. Supp. 1449, 1459 (D. Kan. 1994); see also Mu’Min, 500 U.S. at 433 (O’Connor, J., concurring) (“A particular juror’s tone of voice or demeanor might have suggested to the trial judge that the juror had formed an opinion about the case and should therefore be excused.”). And even where a questionnaire is used, in-person follow-up questioning is important to give the court the “face-to-face opportunity to gauge demeanor and credibility.” Skilling, 561 U.S. at 395. A jury questionnaire would not materially assist jury selection in this case, since there is no suggestion that this particular defendant has received significant, unfavorable pretrial publicity, and any potential prejudice due to general media coverage of the events of January 6, 2021 can be adequately probed through in-person voir dire examination.

CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons, the defendant’s motion to transfer venue should be denied.

ECF No. 46 at 15 (D.D.C. Apr. 18, 2022) (TSC). But the practice is not common in this District. And judges in other January 6 cases have achieved the efficiency often served by questionnaires by using a hybrid voir dire in which the court initially asks questions of the entire venire, with prospective jurors noting their answers on notecards, followed by individual questioning.
