

To The Honorable Judge Randolph Moss,

I am writing this letter to advise you of the type of man Luke Faulkner is. I've only known his wife and family for 5 years. I am proud to say they are my friends. If the children are a reflection of their parents, then you should meet his children. If you reflect people you associate with, then I consider myself in great company, and would think others would think the same.

He volunteers and leads many programs at his church. He welcomes those who are lost and listens and helps in any way to help them find their way. Including allowing them to stay in his home, feed and clothe them. He and his family have taken in single people to whole families. Fairly recently, a whole family stayed while he helped build them a home. He's been there to help people overcome life trials, if only to listen. He lives a Good Christian Life as God would want of all of us.

His love for his family is unprecedented. Their children are also active in the community and church. He leads by hard work, proving to his children, things are earned not given. Earning and giving are better than receiving. He lives a life dedicated to his family, for their betterment.

Luke loves this country. I have never heard him say anything bad about anyone, even those who do him wrong, those whom he doesn't agree with. He wants to see people succeed, live a productive, healthy life, even if they don't believe exactly as he does. He believes in being part of the process and working in the process, but not destroying the process. He admits he was in the building and willing to take responsibility for his actions.

I believe he, like others, just wanted to see inside. He is not a destructive person. He is not a vigilante. He is not a ringleader. He, like many others, seemed to be part of the cause, which others diverted. According to him he was trying to leave, after he realized the "cause" was not what it was supposed to be.

I am asking for you to give Luke as much leniency as possible, Even more than he agreed to with his plea. If you can see a way to do this, I know you will have a grateful community, church and family.

Very Truly Yours
Judith Iori

Attn: Honorable Judge Randolph Moss

As a friend and fellow musician, I am writing on behalf of Luke Faulkner. I have known Luke for many years, much of that time we spent hours together weekly playing music. Granted, it's not so amazing to say Luke is a great guy when everyone is enjoying a song. But consider that within a group of creative musicians where ideas clash and egos get damaged, this is where most talented groups meet their demise. Disagreements take place, tempers flare, harsh words flow, and it can lead to much worse. Luke has been faced with this fire more than once and he's never been rattled, he's never raised his voice, and he's certainly never been violent.

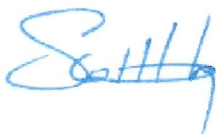

I have become close with Luke on a personal level as well and where it relates to family and God, I believe Luke is in a wonderful place. I cannot recall a time where he and his wife had an argument or issue at all, certainly none they could not work through with mutual respect. Luke is also a proud father and actively a part of his children's lives. His children seem very respectful and caring for their father, which seems to be obvious fruits of their parents' labor (no small feat in today's society). When it comes to God, I feel that my friend Luke leads by example with his actions as a Christian. We both donate our time and skill to our respective churches in the music ministry, but Luke goes beyond by sharing in bible study groups and witnessing to invite complete strangers to learn about our God.

Having come from a family of military veterans and being a veteran myself, it's fair to say I am a patriot. Luke and I most likely share the same values and freedoms that I served to protect. I am not justifying what happened on Jan.6, but I know Luke would not have participated in a march that was pre planned to be violent.

If intent has any merit, Luke is the first person who would come to the aid of an officer in distress. In fact, I would not be surprised if that actually happened on Jan. 6.

I hope this information is beneficial.

Respectfully,

Scott Crowley
